Wherein is discovered their Designs and Practices for the Subversion of Government in Church and State.

Written in French, by an Eminent Divine of the REFORMED CHURCH, and now Englished.

Isaac Basire

EPIPHANIUS Lib. I. Hæres. 27.

Quod hominum Genus ad Ecclesiæ Dei probrum & Scandalum adornasse & submisisse Satanas videtur, quippe qui Christianorum sibi nomen indiderint, ut propter eos offensæ Gentes a sanctæ Ecclesiæ utilitate abhorreant, nuntiataque veritatem, ob immania illorum facinora & incredibilem nequitiam, repudiant; ut inquam frequentibus illorum sceleribus animadversis, eos quoque, quia Sancta Dei Ecclesia sunt, tales esse sibi persuadeant, atque ita a verissima Dei Doctrina aures avertant, ut certe paucorum improbitate, conspecta in universos eadem Maledicta conijciant.

Printed in Villa Franca. Anno Dom. 1659.

PREFACE.

WE will take our first rise from that Royal Declaration or Manifesto which his Majesty of Great Britain, Charles the first, commanded to be exposed to the world, for the satisfaction, not onely of his own People, but of the Reformed Churches abroad, at that time when the differences were at the highest, twixt Him and his Parliament-Subjects, who practised all the artifices that could be, (by making use of Presse and Pulpit for that purpose) to make him not onely odious at home, but sent clandestine Agents, and Intelligence abroad, to traduce him among the Reformed Princes and States, that He was branling in his belief, and had a design to reintroduce the Roman Religion into his Dominions, which was the motive of publishing this Manifesto hereunto annext.

CHARLES

CHARLES by the Providence of Almighty God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defendor of the Faith, &c. To all who pro-fesse the true Reformed Protestant Religion, of what Nation, degree, and condition soever they be to whom this present Declaration shal come, Greeting.

*Hereas We are given to understand, that many false rumors, and scandalous letters are spread up and down amongst the Reformed Churches in forreign parts, by the Pollitick, or rather the pernicious industry
of*

of some ill-affected persons, that we have an inclination to recede from that Orthodox Religion, which we were born, baptized, and bred in, and which We have firmly professed and practised throughout the whole course of Our life to this moment, and that We intend to give way to the introduction, and publick exercise of Popery again in Our Dominions : Which conjecture or rather most detestable calumny, being grounded upon no imaginable foundation, hath raised these horrid tumults, and more then barbarous warres throughout this flourishing Island, under pretext of a kind of Reformation, which would not onely prove incongruous, but incompatible with the fundamental Lawes, and government of this Kingdom, We desire that the whole Christian world should take notice and rest assured, that We never entertained in Our imagination the least thought to attempt such a thing, or to depart a jot from that holy Religion, which when We received the Crown and Scepter of this Kingdom, We took a most solemn Sacramental Oath to professe and protect. Nor doth Our most constant practise and quotidian visible presence in the exercise of this sole Religion, with so many Asseverations in the head of Our Armies, and the the publick attestation of our Barons , with the circumspection used in the education of our Royall Off-spring , besides divers other undeniable Arguments , onely demonstrate this ; But also that happy Alliance of Marriage , We contracted mixt Our eldest Daughter , and the Illustrious Prince of Orenge , most clearly confirmes the reallity of Our intentions herein ; by which Nuptial ingagement it appears further , that Our endeavours are not onely to make a bare profession thereof in Our own Dominions , but to enlarge and corroborate it abroad as much as lieth in Our Power : This most holy Religion of the Anglican Church , ordained by so many Convocations of learned Divines , confirmed by so many Acts of National Parliaments , and strengthened by so many Royal Proclamations , together with the Ecclesiastick discipline , & Liturgy thereunto appertaining , which Liturgy and discipline , the most eminent of Protestant Authors , as well Germans as French ; as well Danes , as Swedes and Swittzens ; as well Belgians as Bohemians , do with many Elogies ( and not without a kind of Envy ) approve and applaud in their publick Writings , particularly in the transactions of the Synod of Dort , wherein besides other

other of Our Divines ( who afterwards were Prelates ) one of Our Bishops assisted, to whose dignity all due respects and precedency was given : This Religion We say, which Our Royal Father of blessed memory doth publickly assert in that His famous Confession addres'd, as we also do this our Protestation, to all Christian Princes ; This, this most holy Religion, with the Hierarchy and liturgy thereof, We solemnly protest, that, by the help of Almighty God, we will endeavour to Our utmost power, and last period of our life, to keep entire and inviolable, and will be careful, according to Our duty to Heaven, and the tenor of the foresaid most sacred Oath at Our Coronation, that all our Ecclesiasticks in their severall degrees and incumbences shal preach and practise the same. Wherefore We enjoyn and command all Our Ministers of State beyond the Seas, aswell Ambassadors as Residents, Agents, and Messengers, And We desire all the rest of Our loving subjects that sojourn either for curiosity or commerce in any forraign parts, to communicate, uphold and assert this Our solemn and sincere protestation when oportunitie of time and place shall be offered.

This Royal Declaration or Manifesto was committed to the management and care of James Howel Esquire Clerk of his Majesties privy Counsel ) who though then Prisoner in the Fleet ) performed the business very worthily, and like himself.

TO THE MINISTERS OF THE Reformed Church

GENTLEMEN;

Having to contend with them who invite you to uphold their disloyalty by your example, nothing can be more to our purpose, then to prefix your example in the front of this work to teach them Loyalty.

During the Agitations of the State, your Church as the Needle in the Mariners Compasse, kept steady upon the point of rest, which is God and the King.

King : And your obedience served as an Ensign on a hill to France, to guide the people to their duty. Whereby you have justified the holinesse of your profession, making the world know, the Religion you teach binds you to be good subjects, and that you Honour the King ; because ye feare God.

Therefore the English Covenanters did very ill to addresse themselves to you, since they hold a method quite contrary, for they dishonour and Massacre their King, under a colour of Devotion to God, and undertake to set up the Kingdome of Jesus Christ by the ruine of the Kingdom of their Sovereign; which is as if they would build the temple of God with Cannon shot, and defend Religion in violating it.

The truth of the Gospel was never advanced by these waies, but the patience, and even the sufferings of the Christians, was it which propagated the Christian Religion, and rendred the Church mighty and glorious. Those who suffered under the Pagan and Arian Emperours conquered both the Empire and Emperours, and the Champions of truth purchased a Kingdome to Jesus Christ, not in shedding the blood of their Sovereigns, but in pouring forth their own for righteousness, by a voluntary submission to their Judgement.

He who cannot frame himself to this Doctrine, doth not so much as God requires of him, if he makes profession of Christianity; for Christ tells us in calling us, that whosoever taketh not up his crosse, and cometh not after me, cannot be my Disciple; and commands him who would embrace the Gospel, to set down before and calculate the expence expence, as if he were about to build. Certainly he that cannot resolve to subject himself to his Sovereign for the love of God, and never draw his sword against him to whom God hath committed it, made an ill Calculation before he dedicated himself to Jesus Christ, for he ought not to take upon him Christianity, if he were not able to go through with it, and was not resolved rather to suffer then resist, and to spend his goods, and life to preserve himself in that subjection, commanded by the word of God.

For maintaining this holy Doctrine, we have been banished and pursued with Armes, and after we had defended our Sovereign with more fidelity then successe, we have been constrained to forsake our dear Country, driven from our houses, and spoiled of our Revenews; but yet we praise God for giving them, since he hath done us the honour that we should lose them for his service; and we ought this to our King of whom our lands held, to Abandon them for love of him: For to enter into a Covenant against him peaceably to enjoy his, and the Kings his predecessors bounty, and to betray the truth, and our consciences to save our monies, we could never resolve.

Now since those who have done the evil, began first to cry out, and have spread their unjust clamours through all the Reformed Churches, we'll make the same journey with our just complaints, and after the example of the abased Levite, by the Sons of Jemini, we send this recitall of our greivances through all the quarters of Israel; Consider of it, take advice and speak your minds.

The injury which doth touch us nearest, is not our Exile, nor the losse of our goods, nor theirs of our nearest Relations, but the extreame wrong done to the Gospel, and the Reformed Churches, to whom these new Reformers falsely impute their Maximes of Rebellion, - and hereby render our most holy profession suspected and hatefull to Princes of a contrary Religion.

This ( Gentlemen ) toucheth you very neare, considering your Condition, and the Summons the Assembly at Westminster, made to you to Covenant with them, or to make a Covenant like theirs. The Epistle was addressed to the Church of Paris, in the name of all the Reformed Churches of France, and with the Epistle they sent the Oath of their Covenant, which concludes with an Exhortation in forme of a prayer to God, That it would please him to stir up by their example, other Churches who live under the Tyranny of Anti-Christ, to sweare this Covenant or one like it.

This same Epistle together with the Oath being sent to the Ministers of the Church of Geneva, stirred up in them a holy jealousy, and drew from that excellent person, Monsieur Diodati who is now in Glory, an answer worthy of him in the name of all the Church: Repell this horrible scandall, which so extreemly wrongs Christianity in Generall; wash and cleanse this filthy attempt of the blackest oppression, which above all is imputed to the most pure profession of the Gospel, as if the Gospel opposed; and affronted by a kind of Antipathy and secret hatred, all Royall power power of Sovereign Authority. Pacify the exasperated spirit , and too much provoked of your King , and drive him not upon pinacles and precipices.

Blessed be God who touched the heart of this great person , whose memory shall be for ever precious for rendring so open a Testimony to the truth ; And because he have not suffered himself to be flattered and perswaded by the compliments of these enemies to his Majesty , to applaud them in their evil Actions , such are these Refiners of Reformation , as not content by their Faction's Zeale to set their own Country on fire , but they labour also to cast the fire into their neighbours , and to blow Rebellion through all Europe.

And of late the most enormous actions of the English drew from Mr. Salmasius , Prince of letters , and the Honour of France , a defence of the right of Kings ; God was so pleased to raise up the learnedst pen of these times to defend the best cause of the world , In which this great person hath highly honoured his Country ; But to speak right , he more honoured himself, and the Church wherein he was Educated. For if hereafter these malefactors dare be so bold , as to say the Reformed Churches approved their Actions ; they shall produce this book which condemnes them , and defends the royall cause with such wisdom , and efficacy of spirit , suitable to the dignity of the subject , and shall require them to produce, if they can, any one of the Reformed Churches who have in the least manner written in favour of their proceedings: it should have been a strange and shamefull thing, if there were none found amongst the Re- formed Churches who should not disowne their wicked Doctrines, and cause all Princes, and people of the world to know that the Reformed Churches are very far from following their Councils, and abhorre their seductions to disloyalty, from what part soever they come.

Heretofore indeed it was accounted the duty of Charity, and prudence to cover the faults of this faction, and if corruption enter into Israel not to publish it in Gath; but when the Doctrine of Rebellion disputed in corners ascends the pulpit, hold Assizes in open Court, sends forth Ambassadors, invites the Reformed Churches to their party, and employ the Gospel, piety, Zeale of Gods Glory, to raise subjects against their Sovereignes, now 'tis time or never to pluck off their mask of hypocrisy, and shew where the evil lies, and discover the wickednesse of a party, to preserve from shame and disgrace the general; and the rather since the Aphorismes of Rebellion, and seducing people to sedition, are reproached to the Protestants, and employed by the enemies of our holy Religion to stirre up Princes against the Church, and the pure profession of the Gospel. 'Tis the duty of the Reformed Churches to speak aloud, that 'tis not we that teach the people are above their King, and that endeavour by letters and intelligences a General rising, but that it's the Covenanters of England, who attempting to cut off their King and Monarchy by the sword, labour in vain to seduce their neighbours, to encrease their party, thereby to hide themselves in the multitude of their complices, they came forth of us long since, but were not of us, and for their Doctrines and Actions (which

We assure our selves Gentlemen, in that Divine assistance which hath to this present upheld you, that ye will never be seduced to defend evil, neither by complacency nor contradiction, but will follow the precept of the Apostle Saint James, Jam. 2. 1. My brethren have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory with respect of persons. Ye will consider that those who chase us, seek not your alliance, but to strengthen their separation from us, and not to embrace good Doctrine, or follow your Concell, which if they had asked and followed, the one had never sold their King, nor the other ever massacred him.

Believe it (Sirs) they are your best friends at distance rather then neer, and if ye never converse with them, ye will never be weary of their company.

Your free, meek and solid piety, which feeds it self simply upon the substance of Religion, without picking quarrells at the shell, is very farre from sordid superstition, and the Hypochondriak and bloody Zeale of these Covenanters, who pretend to advance the Kingdome of Jesus Christ, by cutting the throates of his disciples, and Cementing his Temple with blood instead of the Cement of charity, and in the mean while, make some petty Circumstances, the principalls of Religion, and cut out their holy Doctrine according to the Discipline which they are forging, as he that cuts his flesh to make his doublet fit for his body.

By how much more these are wicked by so much, the more are they worthy of compassion, whom we must behold as people Drunken with the wine of Astonishment, which they themselves confesse in their Epistle they sent unto you, they shall find the rest of their description in that place, where they borrowed those words, and shall there behold themselves set forth, as a wild Bull in a net, they are full of the fury of the Lord: For as the wild Bull rageth when he feeles himself entangled, and entangleth, and ensnares himself more by raging; so these miserable people, who by an impetuosity without reason rid themselves out of all lawes, Ecclesiasticall and civil, are ensnared in stronger bonds then before, and by their brutish fury are more and more entangled, these, these are the sad effects of the just wrath of God, who hath smot those with blindness, who have abused the light of the Gospel, and have given them the heart of a beatt, as he did to Nebuchadnezar, who have cast off all humanity. God by his mercy reduce to their senses, and guide them and us in his Paths, and grant his peace to them that are farre off, and to them that are near. For in civil Warrs, that party that is neereest to God, and right, is yet v. y far from his duty.

Isa. 57.
19.

Your wisdome will instruct you to profit by the folly of your neighbours, and their evil Actions teach you to doe well, they will let you see that to destroy the Ecclesiasticall and politticall order, by a bloody Warre to reform Religion, is to commit the fault in the vulgar Latine Translation, Everit domum in stead of Everit, Luke 15. 8. That is to overthrow the house in stead of sweeping sweeping it, the folly is the greater, when it's mely to find a trifle, and that they overthrow both Church and State, for some particularity which were it good, cannot recompence the General destruction.

You will also learn by the proceedings of these Covenanters, that it's impossible to alter the foundation of Church and State, without pulling down the house, which is the work of the blind, as Sampson, to overturn the pillars of the publick building, that those that thrust them down might be crushed to peeces under the fall; that those that take the Church and State a peeces to cleanse it, have not the power to put it together, and in order again when they please, and that all violent changes in a State, as in an old body, are always for the worst.

We hope also that our good God, beholding us with pitty, in this our weak condition, will give you somewhat to observe and learn from us, as that a Rebellion which pulls down Monarchy, without thinking so to lift it up, and fortifie't, as a violent crysis, which if it takes not away the patient, contributes to his recovery. For the insolence of the new Masters, doth mind the people of their duty to their lawful Prince, and the unlooked for successe of a new Obligarchy, sows dissension amongst the usurpers. The conduct of the providence of God in the movings of States teacheth us, that in chastising Kings by the Rebellion of their subjects, hereby he punisheth the people more then their Kings, and those very Kings that God gives people in his wrath, Hosea 13. 11. are not taken away without his fury, and the publick ruine, which is then greatest, when he takes from an ungratefull people, a King whom, he have given in his mercy; the wise, and fearing God, should consider their sufferings under their Sovereigns, as Sinister Influences of Celestiall bodies, against which no man in his wits will draw his sword, for both the one and the other comes from heaven, and cannot be remedied but by humility, prayers, and veneration, all other remedies are worse then the evil.

Also amidst your grieve to behold the ruine of our not long since flourishing Churches, you may comfort your selves in the weaknesse of our condition, which now renders us lesse subject to the like dangers; for as full and sanguine bodies, are most subject to violent feavers and sharp diseases, which those of weaker complexions are ordinarily free from, so those persons who have power in their hands, and are puffed up with a long prosperity, ordinarily fall into most violent evils, which sciseth not upon them, but with too much strength. Then when the Church hath the least lustre, she oft times is nearest to God, as the Moon is never nearer the Sun then when she is in the lowest decree of her declension, and without light to our regard. The power of God is made perfect in our weaknesse, and we hope to behold you subsist, yea increase and grow in bowing down under the storm, whilst those that have so striven and contended against their Sovereigns shall be rooted out by their arrogancy.

By humility and submission under the mighty hand of God, which leades his Church through ways he knows safest for them, and stopping the ear to all factious Councels clothed with the zeale of Religion, ye will at last obtain that testimony of God

God which he gives to the Church of Ephesus ; I know thy works , and thy labour , and thy patience , and how thou canst not bear them which are evil , and thou hast tried them which say they are Apostles , and are not , and hast found them liars , and hast borne , and hast patience , and hast not fainted , and thus ye shall surely obtain the promised reward following , To him that overcometh , will I give to eate of the tree of life , which is in the midst of the paradise of God. Rev. 2.2.

This hope is our support in the depth of our afflictions , for under that terrible weight of publick and particular miseries , capable to bear down the strongest and firmest spirits , we are raised and kept up by this consolation , that we serve a good Master , who will never forsake them who forsake all which is most dear to them to follow him. What though our sufferings be the effects of our sinnes , yet are they also honourable markes of our loyalty , both to God and our King , and though we have left our estates a little before death would have taken them away , yet God hath by his grace preserved in us a good conscience , riches which is not subject to sequestration , but dying we shall carry away with us.

In these great tryalls of our faith and patience , whilst we seek ease in pouring forth our griefs into the bosome of our brethren , behold yet another encrease of affliction , upon affliction ; for we find to our great regret , that the subtilty of our enemies have begotten an evil

evil understanding between you and some of ours, to which some have much contributed, if the complaints we beare be true, that they have manifested and declared themselves contrary to the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches, and that they have despised your assemblies, as not being Churches, and maintained that there could be no Church where there was no Bishop.

As for their Doctrine, if it be divers from our publick Confession, they are no more of our Church then of your, and to satisfie you upon this point, we have joyned the confession of the Church of England, which all those who have been received into holy Orders, sware to defend at their reception, and all who were to be admitted into Churches were enjoined at their entrance, publickly to read, and to professe thereupon, their consent to them, under pain of losing their Benefices. If any have departed from that profession, which they did so solemnly make, the body of the Church which maintains that holy Doctrine, is no way responsible for their erring; if the Rebels had not prevented the King from assembling a nationall Synod, to which his Majesty purposed to invite other Reformed Churches, your Judgments would have been heard for the purging our Churches of all new Doctrines, which without all comparison are worse, and in a farre greater number amongst our enemies, then amongst the Royall party.

As for this position, that there cannot be a Church without a Bishop, we account it full of rashnesse and void of Charity; It's indeed a cruel sentence to deprive of the benefit of the Gospel, and of their union with Christ, all those Churches which live under the crosse, and cannot enjoy the Episcopall Order. That Famous Dr Andrews Bishop of Winchester was not of this opinion, for in one of his Epistles touching Episcopacy, He (saith he) should be harder then Iron, who would not acknowledge that there are holy Churches that subsist and flourish without Bishops: and with what respect our Bishops speak of your Church, you shall read in this ensuing Treatise.

It's easie to see that the Episcopall Order is wholly incompatible with the present condition of the Reformed Churches of France, for if there were twenty or thirty Bishops amongst you, that should Govern all the other Churches, it would be easie for those of the contrary Religion under whom you live, to fill up those places with some persons who should be at their devotion; whence would follow, either a seduction, or an oppression of the other Pastors: but whilst the Gentlemen of the Clergy in the Court, behold all Pastors equal, they will lose their cunning in this multitude, and although they be excellent in playing one the Organs, yet they have not fingers enough to touch every Jack.

If your Order of equality might or ought to be conserved, if it should please God, the French Monarchy should embrace the Reformation, it's a thing we will not touch, but if that onely were the obstruction, we account you too wise, and good Christians, and such as would not hinder the settling of the holy Doctrine, for maintaining a point of discipline.

You

You then ( Gentlemen ) joyning to your Christian charity, the French courtesy, pardon our English Schollers, who peradventure have brought with them from the University, an humour a little affirmative, and from the fresh remembrance of their glorious Church, retain yet an admiration of home things, which is an humour neighbour Nations observe in the English, and which those that heretofore have known England, will easily pardon.

Consider on the other side, whether some of yours have not given them just occasion to be so sharp and bitter, and to passe their limits in their affirmations; it cannot be denied but we have met with spirits possessed with the reports of our adversaries, who have been more ready to Court you then we, as always those that have an evil cause, are ever more diligent to gain by faction, that which they want, and cannot obtain by right. It may be also that your people have manifested themselves too rigid in their Opinions, as well as some of ours upon points which touch not the principals of Religion; and as it is ordinary for humane infirmity, to turn custome into necessity, you may not wonder that if some of yours maintain as necessary and perpetuall, which your wise Reformers established as Arbitrary, and for the present necessity, as is formally declared by the last Article of your Discipline.

We have placed in the front of this work, the Manifesto, of the Late King Charles the First, of blessed and Glorious memory, in which he takes a Religious care to Satisfie you, touching his constancy in the Reformed Religion, and of his Resolution to enlarge and strengthen it in all

forraign Countries to the utmost of his power, he could no more to manifest how much he valued your affection and good opinion, and we following the example of our holy and Glorious Martyr, labour here to knit with you a holy union, which our enemies have so vigorously laboured to break, and in these our great afflictions do take care to prevent your, and to give you saving Connell.

Know then, Gentlemen, that your most holy Religion is much defamed by the Actions of these paracide Zealots, who have particularly courted and invited you to Covenant with them, and that your Churches are blemished in reputation, onely because these men have dared to addresse their infamous complements to you, a thing neverthelesse which ye could not prevent how great soever your aversion were from their wicked actions; wherefore we beseech you, as you love your subsistence and the honour of the Gospel, which ought to be dearer to you then your lives, that you exhort the general of your Churches to declare readily and vigorously by a publick Act against these false brethren and their pernicious Maximes, for fear least the crime of men, be imputed to Religion, and that the innocent suffer not for the guilty. Let it appear to the State under which ye live, that the Reformed Religion for conscience sake upheld Kingly Authority, and that it is the true Doctrine that maintains subjects in their duty, and a Kingdome in peace.

You may also boldly advise the Gentlemen at Court to beware of them, and that they give order to prevent that inundation, that is threatened from our Ilands, and let them be most assured that the Independent Armies, have not lesse ambition ambition to cause all people to rise, and overthrow all the Monarchs of Christendome, and that to this effect have often declared his intentions, all the popular tumults in France are the productions of this Artist, ever in motion, infatigable, swoln with successe, who hath his eyes and hands every where, and gains in all places either by the sword or gold; now in all changes of the State whosoever gains, the Church loseth, and the filth in all inundations resteth upon the val-lies.

We are so near neighbours that the contagion of our evils cannot but passe to you, therefore ye shall do prudently and Christianly to keep your selves from the contagion of our evils, and since those of the Reformed Religion are better instructed, then the other, it is therefore for them first to begin to do their duty.

And to this the considerations in this ensuing Treatise will encourage you, and our adversities will furnish you with better Counsels then the prosperity of our persecutors, Agræ Fortunæ sana Concilia, we hope that this true and lively pourtraiture of their Rebellious Covenant that we present unto you, will so strike the spectators with horror that they will become good Christians, and good subjects by Antiperistifis.

I.

There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions; of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness, the Maker and preserver of all things both visible and invisible. And in unity of this Godhead there be three persons, of one substance, power, and eternity; the Father, the Son, and holy Ghost.

II.

The Sonne, which is the Word of the Father, begotten from everlasting of the Father, the very and eternall God of one substance with the Father, took mans nature in the womb of the blessed Virgine, of her substance: so that two whole and perfect natures, that is to say, the Godhead and manhood, were joyned together in one person, never to be divided, whereof is one Christ, very God and very man who truly suffered, was crucified, dead, and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not onely for Originall guilt, but also for actuall sinnes of men.

III.

As Christ died for us, and was buried: so also is it to be beleêved, that he went down into hell.

IV.

Christ did truly rise again from death, and took again his body, with flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of mans nature, wherewith he ascended into heaven, and there sitteth untill he return to iudge all men at the last day.

V.

The holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son, is of one Substance, maiestie and glory, with the Father and the Son, very and eternall God.

VI.

Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation: so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be beleêved as an Article of the faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation. In the name of the holy Scripture

ture; we do understand those Canonick Books of the Old & New Testament, of whose authority was never any doubt in the Church.

All the Bookes of the New Testament, as they are commonly received, we do receive and account them Canonically.

VII.

THe Old Testament is not contrary to the New, for both in the Old and new Testament, everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ, who is the only Mediator between God and man, being both God and man. Wherefore they are not to be heard which feign that the old fathers did look onely for transitory promises. Although the Law given from God by Moses, as touching Ceremonies and Rites, do not bind Christian men, nor the civil precepts thereof ought of necessity to be received in any Common wealth; yet notwithstanding, no Christian man whatsoever is free from the

the obedience of the Commandments, which are called Morall.

VIII.

THe thræ Creeds, Nice Creed, Athanasius Creed, and that which is commonly called the Apostles Creed, ought thoroughly to be receiued and belæued: for they may be proved by most certain warrants of holy Scripture.

IX.

O Riginall sinne standeth not in the following of Adam, (as the Pelagians do vainly talk) but it is the fault and corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is ingendred of the off-spring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from originall righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil, so that the flesh lusteth alwaies contrary to the spirit, and therefore in every person born into this world, it deserveth Gods wrath and damnation. And this infection of nature doth remain, yea, in them that are regenerated, whereby the lust of the flesh, called in Greek φρονημα σαρκος, which some do expound the wisdom, some sensuality, some the affection, some the desire of the flesh, is not subject to the Law of God. And although there is no condemnation for them that belæve and are baptized, yet the Apostle doth confesse, that concupiscence and lust, hath of it self the nature of sinne.

THe condition of man after the fall of Adam, is such, that he cannot turn and prepare himself by his own natural strength and good works to faith and calling upon God: Wherefore we have no power to do good works pleasant and acceptable to God, without the grace of God by Christ preventing us, that we may have a good will, and working with us, when we have that good will.

XI.

WE are accounted righteous before God, only for the merit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ by faith, and not for our own works, or deserving. Wherefore, that we are justified by faith onely, is a most wholesome Doctrine, and very full of comfort, as more largely is expressed in the Homily of Justification.

XII.

Albeit that good works, which are the fruits of faith, and follow after Justification, cannot put away our sinnes, and enure the severity of Gods judgement, yet are they pleasing and acceptable to God in Christ, and do spring out necessarily of a true and lively faith, in so much that by them a lively faith may be as evidently known, as a tree discerned by the fruit.

XIII.

Works done before the grace of Christ, and the inspiration of his Spirit are not pleasant to God, forasmuch as they spring not of faith in Jesus Christ, neither do they make men meet to receive grace, or (as the School-Authors say) deserve grace of congruity: yea, rather for that they are not done as God hath willed and commanded them to be done, we doubt not but they have the nature of sinne.

XIV.

Voluntary Works besides, over and above Gods Commandments, which they call works of Supererogation, cannot be

be taught without arrogancy and impiety. For by them men do declare that they do not onely render unto God as much as they are bound to do, but that they do more for his sake then of bounden duty is required: Whereas Christ saith plainly, When ye have done all that are commaunded to you, say, We are unprofitable servants.

XV.

Christ in the truth of our nature, was made like unto us in all things (sinne onely except) from which he was clearly void, both in his flesh, and in his Spirit. He came to be a Lamb without spot, who by sacrifice of himself once made, should take away the sinnes of the world: and sinne (as Saint John saith) was not in him. But all we the rest, (although baptized, and born again in Christ) yet offend in many things, and if we say we have no sinne, we deceive our selves, and the truth is not in us.

XVI.

Not every deadly sinne willingly committed after Baptisme, is sinne against the holy Ghost, and unpardonable. Wherefore, the grant of repentance is not to be denied to such as fall into sinne after Baptisme. After we have received the holy Ghost, we may depart from grace given, and fall into sinne, and by the grace of God (we may) arise again, and amend our lives. And therefore, they are to be condemned, which say they can no more sinne as long as they live here, to deny the place of forgiveness to such as truly repent.

XVII.

Predestination to life, is the everlasting purpose of God, whereby (before the foundations of the world were laid) he hath constantly decreed by his counsel, secret to us, to deliver from curse and damnation, those whom he hath chosen in Christ out of mankind, & to bring them by Christ to everlasting salvation, as vessels made to honour. Wherefore they which be indued with so excellent a benefit of God, be called according to Gods purpose by his Spirit working in due season: they through grace obey the calling, they be justified freely: they be made Sons of God by adoption: they be made like the Image of his onely begotten Sonne Iesus Christ: they walk religiously in good works, and at length by Gods mercy they attain to everlasting felicity.

As the godly consideration of Predestination and our Election in Christ, is full of sweet, pleasant, and unspeakable comfort to godly persons, and such as feel in themselves the working of y<sup>e</sup> Spirit of Christ, mortifying the works of the flesh, and their earthly members, and drawing up their mind to high and heavenly things, as well because it doth greatly establish and confirm their faith of eternall salvation, to be enjoyed through Christ, as because it doth fervently kindle their love towards God: So, for curious and carnall persons, lacking the Spirit of Christ, to have continually before their eyes the sentence of Gods predestination, is a most dangerous down fall, whereby the devil doth thrust them either into desperation or into rechelesnesse of most unclean living, no lesse perillous then desperation.

Furthermore, we must receive Gods promises in such wise as they be generally set forth to us in holy Scripture: and in our desires, that will of God is to be followed, which which we have expressly declared unto us in the Word of God.

XVIII.

They also are to be had accursed, that presume to say that every man shall be saved by the Law or sect which he professeth, so that he be diligent to frame his life according to that law, and the light of nature. For holy Scripture doth set out unto us only the Name of Jesus Christ, whereby men must be saved.

XIX.

The visible Church of Christ, is a congregation of faithful men, in the which the pure Word of God is preached, and the Sacraments be duly ministered, according to Christs Ordinance, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same.

As the Church of Hierusalem, Alexandria, and Antioch have erred: So also the Church of Rome hath erred, not onely in their living and manner of ceremonies, but also in matters of faith.

XX.

The Church hath power to decree Rites or Ceremonies, and authority in controversies of faith: And yet it is not lawfull for the Church to ordain any thing that is contrary to Gods Word written, neither may it so expound one place of Scripture, that it be repugnant to another. Wherefore although the Church be a witnesse and a keeper of holy Writ: yet as it ought not to decree any thing against the same, so besides the same ought it not to enforce any thing to be believed for necessity of salvation.

XXI.

Generall Councils may not be gathered together without the commandment and will of Princes. And when they be gathered

ed

ed together (forasmuch as they be an assembly of men, whereof all be not governed with the Spirit and Word of God) they may erre, and sometime have erred, even in things pertaining unto God. Wherefore things ordained by them as necessary to salvation, have neither strength nor authority, unlesse it may be declared that they be taken out of holy Scripture.

XXII.

The Romish doctrine concerning Purgatory, Pardons, worshipping and adoration aswell of Images as of Relicks, and also invocation of Saints, is a fond thing, vainly invented, and grounded upon no warranty of Scripture, but rather repugnant to the Word of God.

XXIII.

It is not lawfull for any man to take upon him the office of publick preaching, or ministering the Sacraments in the Congregation, before he be lawfully called, and sent to execute the same. And those we ought to judge lawfully called & sent, which be chosen & called to this work by men, who have publick authority given unto them in the Congregation, to call and send Ministers into the Lords vineyard.

XXIV.

It is a thing plainly repugnant to the Word of God, and the custome of the Primitive Church, to have publick prayer in the Church, or to minister the Sacraments in a tongue not understood of the people.

XXV.

Sacraments ordained of Christ be not only badges or tokens of Christian mens profession: but rather they be certain sure witnessses, and effectuell signes of grace and Gods good will towards us, by the which he doth doth work invisibly in us, and doth not onely quicken, but also strengthen and confirm our faith in him.

There are two Sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the Gospel, that is to say, Baptisme and the Supper of the Lord.

Those five commonly called Sacraments that is to say, Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, & extreame unction, are not to be counted for Sacraments of the Gospel, being such as have grown, partly of the corrupt following of the Apostles, partly are states of life allowed in the Scriptures: but yet have not like nature of Sacraments with Baptisme & the Lords Supper, for that they have not any visible sign or ceremony ordained of God.

The Sacraments were not ordained of Christ to be gazed upon, or to be carried about, but that we should duely use them. And in such onely, as worthily receive the same, they have a wholsome effect or operation: But they that receive them unworthily, purchase to themselves damnation, as S. Paul saith,

XXVI.

Although in the visible Church the evil be ever mingled with the good, and sometime the evil have chief authority in the ministration of the Word and Sacraments: yet forasmuch as they do not the same in their own name, but in Christs, and doe minister by his commission and authority, we may use their ministry, both in hearing the Word of God, and in receiving of the Sacraments. Neither is the effect of Christs ordinance taken away by their wickednesse, nor the grace of Gods gifts diminished from such, as by faith, and rightly do receive the Sacraments ministred unto them, which be effectually, because of Christs institution and promise, although they be ministred by evil men.

Nevertheless, it appertaineth to the discipline of the Church, that inquiry be made of evil Ministers, and that they be accused by those that have knowledge of their offences: and finally being found guilty, by just judgement be deposed.

XXVII.

Baptisme is not onely a signe of profession, and mark of difference, whereby Christian men are discerned from others that be not Christned: but it is also a sign of Regeneration or new birth, whereby, as by an instrument, they that receive Baptisme rightly, are grafted into the Church: the promises of the forgiveness of sinne, and of our adoption to be the Sonnes of God, by the holy Ghost, are visibly signed and sealed: faith is confirmed: and grace increased by virtue of prayer unto God. The Baptisme of young children is in any wise to be retained in the Church, as most agreable with the institution of Christ.

XXVIII.

The Supper of the Lord is not onely a sign of the love that Christians ought to have among themselves one to another: but rather it is a Sacrament of our redemption by Christs death. Insomuch that to such as rightly, worthily, and with faith receive the same, the bread which we break, is a partaking of the Body of Christ: and likewise the Cup of blessing is a partaking of the blood of Christ.

Transubstantiation (or the change of the substance of Bread and Wine) in the Supper of the Lord, cannot be proved by holy Writ: but it is repugnant to the plain words of Scripture, overthroweth the nature of a Sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions.

The body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten in the Supper onely after an heavenly and spirituall manner. And the mean where, by the Body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper, is Faith.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper was not by Christs ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped.

XXIX.

The wicked, and such as be void of a lively faith, although they do carnally and visibly presse with their teeth (as S. Augustine saith) the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ : yet in no wise are they partakers of Christ, but rather to their condemnation do eat and drink the signe or Sacrament of so great a thing.

XXX.

The Cup of the Lord is not to be denied to the Lay people. For both the parts of the Lords Sacrament, by Christs ordinance and commandment ought to be ministred to all Christian men alike.

XXXI.

The offering of Christ once made, is that perfect redemption, propitiation, and satisfaction for all the sins of the whole world, both originall and actuall, and there is none other satisfaction for sinne, but that alone. Wherefore the sacrifices of Masse, in the which it was commonly said, that the Priests did offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, were blasphemous fables, and dangerous deceits.

XXXII.

Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, are not commanded by Gods Law, either to vow the the estate of single life, or to abstain from marriage : Therefore it is lawfull also for them, as for all other Christian men to marry at their own discretion, as they shall judge the same to serue better to Godlinesse.

XXXIII.

That person which by open denunciation of the Church, is rightly cut off from the unity of the Church, & excommunicated, ought to be taken of the whole multitude of the faithfull as an heathen & Publican, untill he be openly reconciled by Penance, and received into the Church by a Judge that hath authority thereunto.

XXXIV.

It is not necessary that Traditions and Ceremonies be in all places one, or utterly like, for at all times they have been diuers, and may be changed, according to the diuersitie of Countries, times, and mens manners, so that nothing be ordained against Gods Word. Whosoever through his private judgement, willingly and purposely doth openly break the Traditions and Ceremonies of the Church, which be not repugnant to the Word of God, and be ordained and approved by common authority, ought to be rebuked openly, (that other may feare to do the like) as he that offendeth against the common Order of the Church, and hurteth the authority of the Magistrate, and woundeth the Consciences of the weak brethren.

Every particular or nationall Church, hath authoritie to ordaine, change, and abolish lish Ceremonies or Rites of the Church, ordained onely by mans authoritie, so that all things be done to edifying.

XXXV.

THe second Book of Homilies, the severall titles whereof we have joyned under this Article, doth contain a godly & wholesome Doctrine and necessary for these times, as doth the former book of Homilies, which were set forth in the time of Edward the sixth: and therefore we judge them to be read in Churches by the Ministers diligently and distinctly, that they may be understood of the people.

The Book of Consecration of Archbishops, and Bishops, and ordering of Priests and Deacons, lately set forth in the time of Edward the sixth, and confirmed at the same time by authority of Parliament, doth contain all things necessary to such Consecration and ordering : neither hath it any thing, that of it selfe is superstitious and ungodly. And therefore, whosoever are consecrated or ordered according to the Rites of that Book, since the second year of the aforesaid King Edward, unto this time, or hereafter shall be consecrated or ordered according to the same Rites,

Rites, we decree all such to be rightly, oꝛ
derly, and lawfully consecrated and oꝛdeꝛ

XXXVII.

The Queenes Majestie hath the chief pow her Dominions, unto whom the chief go vernment of all estates of this Kealm, whe ther they be Ecclesiasticall oꝛ Civill in all causes doth appertain, and is not, noꝛ ought to be subject to any forreign Jurisdiction.

Where wee attribute to the Queenes Majestie the chiefe government, by which titles we understand the mindes of some slanderous folkes to be offended: we give not to our Princes the ministring, either of Gods word, oꝛ of the Sacraments, the which thing the Injunctions also lately set forth by Elizabeth our Queen do most plainly testifie: but that only prerogative which we see to have been given alwaies to all godly Princes in holy Scriptures by God himself, that is, that they should rule all estates and degrees committed to their charge by God, whether they be Ecclesiasti call oꝛ Temporall, and restraine with the Ci vil sword the stubboꝛne and evil doers.

The Bishop of Rome hath no Jurisdiction in this Kealm of England.

The Lawes of the Kealm may punish Christian men with death, foꝛ heinous and grievous offences.

It is lawfull foꝛ Christian men, at the Commandment of the Magistrate, to weare weapons, and serbe in the warres.

XXXVIII.

The Riches and goods of Christians are not common, as touching the right title and possession of the same, as certain Anabaptists do falsely boast. Notwithstanding, every man ought of such things as he possesseth, liberally to give almes to the poore, according to his ability.

XXXIX.

As we confesse that vaine and rash swearing is forbidden Christian men by our Lord Jesus Christ, and James his Apostle: So we iudge that Christian Religion doth not prohibite, but that a man may sweare when the Magistrate requirereth, in a cause of faith and charitie, so it be done according to the Prophets teaching, in justice, judgment, and truth.

Reader,

Reader, In this Treatise, I must confesse, thou wilt find some grosse faults, occasioned through the absence of Him in the Countrey, concerned in it, and the carelesnesse of the Printer, but let thy judgement and discretion amend what is amisse, and let thy ingenuity cause thee favourably to conceive of the Author.

CHAP. I.

Of the seditious Liberty of New Doctrines, which hath been the principal means of the Covenant.

Complete History of our Affairs since the beginning of these Commotions, would be the best Apology for the Justice of our Cause; but this let some brave Spirits labour that are furnished with Records and Intelligences, and who are indued with a judicious Candour, which may leave to after Ages an accomplished portraiture of the wickedness of this last Age; but that we shall undertake here: yet nevertheless since the Question of Right depends upon that of Fact, and that to judge of a Different, we must know who began the Quarrel. It is necessary that something be said of the occasions and beginning of this here; for in regard of the progress, it is so notoriously and prodigiously wicked on our Enemies side, that their neighbours that formerly had too good an opinion of their

Cause,

Cause, acknowledge now that they have rendred it very evil.

It shall be our Task then to let the world see that it hath been Evil from the very beginning, and that their first proceedings were contrary to the Word of God, to the constitution of the Kingdom, and to natural Equity; Yea, that all those fearful prodigies of Iniquity which the world beholds with a just execration, are the necessary consequences of their first avowed and published principles.

Ye must therefore know that the Parliament assembled in Novemb. 1640, was composed for the most part of Persons of Honour, affectionous to their Religion, King and Country, and of some others also whose designs aimed at a general overthrow of all things; These finding themselves to be few in number, labour to joyn to their Faction the numerous and meaner sort of people of London, who being kept under a just and gracious Sovereign in their duty and in happy subjection, could not be induced to mutiny by no other motive then that of Religion, which is the handle by which the Politicians in all times have wound and turned about the Spirits of the people.

We will not nevertheless deprive them of this Glory, that it was they that first brought the Reformation of Religion upon the Stage, but the Honour is due to them who since have suffered for their loyalty towards God and the King; that in this holy enterprise they onely carried themselves vigorously roussly and sincerely, but their good Zeal by the Cunning of the Party was driven so far, that labouring to reform the Clergie, they served without thinking the design of them that would destroy them, and to cause afterward Monarchy to stumble upon the Ruines of the Church.

This profession of the Parliament to reform the Church, fills the hearts of all good men with joy and hope ; for although that the excellent Order in the English Church , deserves highly to be respected and admired ; the purity of the Gospel there being clothed with honour, and descended by an Episcopo Gravity, yet is it of our Government, and of all other in the world, be they Ecclesiastical or Civil, as with Watches, that how good and excellent soever they be, length of time disorders them, that ever and anon they have need of mending and making clean.

It is almost an Age since the Doctrine and Discipline of our Church hath been renewed, and it is a wonder here both the one and the other have been so well conserved in so long a space: Nevertheless, the faults of some Particulars ought not to be imputed to the General. The Church hath flourished under our Discipline, and the Truth hath been preserved, and the Good being put in the Ballance against the Evil ; the people had far more cause to glorifie God, then to complain ; but we have to do with Spirits whose nature is like Lapwings, which in a Garden full of fruits feeds onely on the Caterpillars.

There is nothing so well done that doth not displease some, even the works of God displease the Devil, because they are well done ; and in all those works wherein the spirit of man hath a part, there is nothing so perfect which may not be amended. Our Lyturgie so holy and so highly esteemed in all the reformed Churches, hath nevertheless given offence to many persons amongst us. And although it was for a very small matter, yet those who were affectionate to peace, were content to change something, and so to purchase Concord with their Dissenting brethren at that price.

Whence this overture of Reformation opened a gate to the Liberty of them that desired a change, and the Parliament being composed of persons of different inclinations in matters of religion, every one had liberty to say and write what he pleased, and had a party in the Assembly of Estates that protected and encouraged them: The Germans never wrote so much upon Logick in a hundred years, as the English wrote of the desire of their Ecclesiastical Discipline in three moneths; every week brought forth a thousand seditious pamphlets, which supplied the scarcity of Coals; every writer made a Platform of Reformation according to his humour, and in this New building none would content himself to be a Mason, but every one would be Architect; and there was none of them who called not his reformation the onely Kingdome of Jesus Christ, out of which there was no salvation, tion: But these Kingdomes of Jesus Christ agreed one with another, and with the nature of the thing, as the Titles and Chapters of Mountagnes Essays: The people are called a beast with many heads, and when all these heads shall cry out at one time, and every one with a different cry, I leave you to guess what an Odious discord they make in the ears both of God and man.

In the midst of this universal distraction, it was appointed that a certain number of Divines, differing in the point of Discipline, should meet together to confer about Religion, as well for the interior as the exterior part, where many Bishops and other of the chief of the Clergie met; the Bishop of Lincolne (who afterward was Arch-Bishop of York) made this proposition to them: That the Divines should in no wise touch upon the point of Discipline, until such time as they were agreed about the points Doctrine, hoping thereby that their spirits being united by the bond of one common but holy faith, they would easily accord about the exterior Government or Discipline.

This Counsell was embraced by all, and so wisely managed by that great Personage, that in three meetings, the Divines accorded upon all the substance of religion, and formed hereupon divers Articles, and with one consent condemned divers opinions: This general consent in Doctrine filled them with hope, that the points of Discipline would pass with the like sweetness; and indeed there wanted not much to have made us happy.

But before the report of this good Agreement could be published abroad, the Factious party of the State, fearing above all things this Accord in Religion, suddenly raised a strong Quarrel against the Degree of Bishops, as an appurtenance of Antichrist, and another about their sitting in Parliament; and did so exasperate the people against the Prelates, that in stead of pursuing their designe of Reformation, they were constrained to provide for the safety of their own lives. After this there was no more speech of the Agreement in Religion, for that would have utterly have spoiled their work who intended the earnest, for it had never been possible to have raised the people against the King, if the conclusion of this conference had been made known to the world, that the King, the Court, and the Bishops, made profession of the sincere reformed Religion. Now, because all the Lies and Subtilties of the Devil were not capable to impute unto them another Confession of Faith, but that which they maintain, which was Holy and Orthodox, known every where, and confirmed to the Confessions of all the reformed Churches of Europe; the Factious perswaded the people, both by their Sermons and seditious Libels, that the Degree of Bishops was an essential Branch and Mark of Antichrist, and that to pull them down was to doe the work of the Lord, and to ruine Antichrist; and that if the

the King would maintain them, he would be destroyed with them, as being one of those Kings who gave his Power to the Beast.

And besides the Destruction of Bishops, they openly demanded the Abolition of the Divine Service received in the Church of England, condemning the use of all other prayers, yea even of the Lord's Prayer; Quarrelling with the Apostles Creed, denied the necessity of the Sacraments, boasted of a new Light that had appeared to them from heaven to draw them out of Popish Darkness; and all that was not compatible with their extravagant Illuminations, they called Popery; and the Ministers that disobeyed them, Baal's Priests, and the Supporters of Antichrist.

By such kind of people were the great multitudes stirred, who came crying at the Gates of the King and Parliament for Reformation, threatening with Fire and sword all those that should oppose it: Of these Assemblies, we may speak what is spoken of the Uproar at Ephesus. The Assembly was confused, and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together, for those that called for Reformation, understood not one another, and their opinions were different in Religion, as appears at this day; agreeing onely in this, to pull down the Ecclesiastical Government; and what New Government they will build upon the Ruines of the Old, we shall know when the Sword hath decided the controversie; but whilst the Mariners strive the Ship sinks. The Lord behold his poor Church in compassion.

We have great hope now, beholding the diversity of Opinions and Inclinations, that these evil ingredients will together make a good Temperature, and that the disorder, yea and even the Licensiousness it self will inforce order, as commonly evil Manners beget good Laws; but to attain this, it's required in this general confusion, that those of clear and sound judgments, who see the bottome of the evil, and know the Remedy of it: But having considered them that walk before in the design of Reformation, we find that they are such that neither know the Remedy nor the Evil.

As for the Evil, instead of having their eyes upon the errors of particulars, against the principal points of Faith, and Confession of the English Church; they grew obstinate against certain small and indifferent Ceremonies which the King had many times offered to change by a Synod lawfully assembled; and cast all the Fire of their passion upon the Episcopal preheminance, a Surplis, a Festival, Forms of prayers, Painted windows; and condemning many good things amongst the evil.

And as for the Remedy, we have here whereat to admire, that striking at so small and light evils, they would employ such extreme Remedies, nothing being able to serve but general destruction, as if to heal the pain of the Teeth they would cut off the Head, instead of proceeding by an amiable conference, appointing a deputation of the Clergie of the Kingdome to assemble in a Synod to calm the fiery spirits, and to keep the people in obedience to their Sovereign, and to fasten the building that shaked by the Ciment of Charity; they made open profession that the Reformation could not be effected but by Blood, that they would have no peace with the Bishops and their Clergie, that they must destroy before they build, raze Babylon (as they called our Discipline) even to the very foundations, overthrow the Altars of Baal, and sacrifice all his Priests; that now the time was come that the Israel of God ought to pillage the Egyptians. And that now the just should wash their footsteps in the blood of the ungodly, for such they accounted us; and thus they did us the Honour to plunder and kill us in Scripture language.

And with this Divinity the Pulpits sounded aloud, and the people publicly exhorted to take up Arms against the King, and to destroy all Ministers both of Church and State, that should joyn with him; and for this effect these following Texts of Scripture were pressed by their zealous Preachers. Those mine Enemies which would not Luk. 19. that I should reign over them, bring hither, and 27. slay them before me. Curse ye Meroz, curse Judges 5. ye bitterly the Inhabitants thereof: because they 23. came not to the help of the Lord, to help the Lord against the mighty. Cursed be he that Jerem. 48. doth the work of the Lord deceitfully, and cursed 10. be he that keepeth back his sword from blood;
and

and these they appropriated to their War against their King and Clergie of England, and all that adhered unto them ; there being no way of Reformation in these mens accounts but to kill us for the Love of God, and the Advancement of his Kingdome.

Now being exceedingly astonished, how men of Learning could possibly be so bewitched with a furious and foolish Zeal ; we found at length, having sounded the depth of their opinions, that their Brains were troubled with Prophecies and Revelations ; that their principal reading was in Commentaries upon the Revelation, which they interpreted according to their fancies ; and, that they had studied more, what God would do hereafter, then what their Duty was to do for the present ; that they made no conscience to transgress the declared will of God in his Commands, to accomplish the secret will of his Degree. That they were Millinaries, expecting a Temporal Kingdom of Jesus Christ, believing that the time of that Kingdome was now come ; and to establish that Kingdom, they were to pluck down that of Antichrist, (as they understood) the ancient Ecclesiastical Order, and to dispossess Kings, drive away the wicked, dash the children of Babel against the stones, tread the winepress of the wrath of God till the blood rose to their Bridle reins, that thereby Christ alone may Reign in the world, and the meek inherit the earth : We have since enough tasted of the fruits of their meekness : All this is drawn from the model of the Common-wealth of John a Leyden, and the Prophets of Munster.

But if any of the Covenanters shall disavow these opinions, they cannot deny but they were preached publickly and ordinarily; neither can they deny but the defenders of this pernicious Doctrine were the Chief of their New Reformation, and the Authors of the War; people whose Counsels were applauded as Oracles, and who drew after them their party by the repetition of their sanctified strength of zeal; those who dared to contradict them, did it very fearfully, and kissing their hands before they spake, but they themselves carried all before them, acting with a prophetic liberty and boldness, Also, after all, they onely were the men to be trusted, and who were put upon all great designs and employments; for they feared that they who are leis governed by Euthusiasmes might at last so far forget themselves as to be faithful to their Sovereign, and yield to a peaceable accommodation.

Behold here then, wherefore we would not joyn our selves with these Reformers, because we see that even they themselves have the greatest need of Reformation, being far gone from the Doctrine of the reformed Churches, erring in the Faith, but yet more in Charity: It's they would sweep the Church, as God swept Babylon, with the Beesome of destruction; They speak not of reforming neither Doctrines nor Manners, but to ruine the Persons; They account the most part of the Clergie of the Kingdome unworthy to be corrected, but altogether to be rooted out ; that one part of the Reformation was to ruine the King, and to take the sword from his side to cut off his head ; that the favourers of tumults were the onely persons that were carested, that they lent their ears to the popular tumults, whilst they shut the mouths and bound the hands of the Magistrates : It was they taught that the people were above the King, and that the Command of Saint Paul that every one should be subject to the higher Powers, obliegeth the King for to obey the people ; it was they that upheld, yea favoured and courted all sorts of pernicious Sects, provided that they would bandy with them against their King ; it was they that suffered to go unpunished the Blasphemies in the Pulpits, the Insolencies, Sacrileges and horrible profanations of the Service of God, and permitted all things to those who were of the Zealous party.

We beheld on the other side, that the King took knowledge of the grievances of his people, as well for the spiritual as temporal, and laboured sincerely to remedy them ; that he consented to the alteration of offensive things in religion, and to the punishment of those who were accused as troublers of the Church, provided that the things and persons, were examined by regular and lawful wayes of a general Synod, which he offered to assemble ; he also was pleased to yield of his own right to augment the rights of his subjects, and daily multiplied acts of favour,

favour, capable to convert the most alienated spirits, passed by the many and great affronts that was done to his Authority, and endeavoured by all wayes possible to overcome evil with good.

But the more the King yielded, the more insolent were the factious against him; he offered to reform both the State and Church, but they would not permit him, they themselves would do that work without him. The King sent divers messages to know of them what things they would reform, but to this they answered onely with complaints. Neither could he obtain any declaration of that which they desired, until that his Forts, Magazines, Ships and Revenues were taken from him; the reason of which hath since been given by one of their principal Champions. Having to sow Fuller Ans. the Lords Field, they had need to make a p. 7. fence about it before they begin, that the workmen might labour without interruption; and that to launce the Apostume of a sick State, they must first bind the Patient.

Our Conscience could not accomodate it self to this prudence, neither ever expect any good from such a way of Reformation which would bind the royal hands and feet of Majesty, before they would declare what they desired of his Favour; and cut asunder the Nerves of his Authority and substance, under colour to establish the Kingdome of Jesus Christ.

A strange proceeding to us that have learned of St. Paul, that a Prince bareth not the Rom. 12.4.

sword in vain: But in that is the Minister of God to execute wrath, and that to resist him, yea when he should make use of the sword to commit injustice, is to resist the Ordinance of God: But if he use it well or ill, that ought to be left to him who gave it him, and to whom onely he ought to render account; his Subjects ought to Counsel him if he did ill, and refuse to assist him in evil doing, and not repress him by Arms: That if this Command of St. Paul obliged the Romans to obey a cruel vicious Prince, and enemy to God, we should account our selves much more bound to obey a just, merciful, Religious Prince, whose life was a rare example of piety and sanctity, and his Government so just and peaceable, that he might well be called the Father of his Subjects; who wanted nothing to make them happy, but to know their happiness.

CHAP. II.

That the Covenanters are destitute of all proofs from Holy Scripture for their War made against the King.

THESE violent beginnings of the Covenanters, and their progress also, which overthrows all Humane Authority, had great need to strengthen it self by Divine Authority, to satisfy the conscience; whence is it that they made a great noise of it in their Pulpits, pits, but not in their Disputes; for those that exhorted the people in Scripture term to War against the King, hang down the head when in conference their proofs are demanded; saying, that, It is not for Divines but Lawyers to decide the present quarrel: Whence it appears that there is a great difference betwixt the terms and proofs of Scripture, and that many that have the voyce of the Lamb speak as the Dragon.

But fearing lest they should accuse us, that we suppress their proofs, behold here all that they make use of, both in their Books and Sermons, part borrowed from the writings of the Jesuites, and part from * two * Vindiciae Books which are printed with Machiavels contra Tyrannos & Prince, and not without great reason, for De jure Magistratus there are three wicked Books together, and it's a wonder how that in threescore years their Books have not been burnt for compamy by the hands of the Common Executioner.

They alledge the example of David, who 1 Sam. 22. had six hundred men for his Guard when he <sup>2.</sup> was pursued by Saul.

The example of the Army of Israel, which 1 Sam. 14. saved Jonathan, when Saul would have put <sup>45.</sup> him to Death.

Of Ehud, who slew Eglon King of Moab, Judges 3. an Oppressor of the Israelites. 21.

The example of the Town of Libnah, 2 Chr. 21. which revolted for the obedience of Jehoram, 10. because he had forsaken the Lord God of his Fathers.

2 Chr. 26. 18. Of the priests of Jerusalem, who resisted Uzziah the King, when he would have exercised the Priests Office.

2 King .6. 13. The example of Elisha, who caused the dore to be shut, when Joran the King of Israel sent a messenger to cut off his head.

Judges 5. 23. And also the malediction that Deborah gave to the Inhabitants of Meroz, because they came not to the help of the Lord, when Barak fought against Sicera.

Jerem. 48. 10. Likewise the malediction pronounced by Jeremy against him that should do the work of the Lord deceitfully, and that should keep his Sword from shedding the blood of the Moabites.

The Idols of Laban, and the Genealogies of the Patriarchs, might also have been brought to this purpose; It must needs be, that the spirit of Error and of Lies, have a great power upon the understanding of these people, for to perswade them by such reasons to hazard their Goods and Lives and Consciences in an open War against their Sovereign.

All these passages of Scripture are examples and particular Cases, and all except one far from the point in controversy; but in a matter of such importance as the resisting of the King, which is so expressly forbidden, and under pain of damnation, there is need of a formal Command, or of a permission expressed, that exempts Christians, at least in some certain Cases, for the Crime of resisting sisting the higher powers, which is to resist God, and from the punishment of eternal damnation; without that all the examples of Subjects rising up against their Princes from the very Creation of the world, cannot, nor is able to put Conscience into a quiet condition: He hath but small knowledge that knows not that examples prove nothing but that such a thing hath been done, and is possible, not that it ought to be done, or that it is lawful to be done; if there be not a Law built upon the Example, and a Sovereign Authority given to it, that it may be a pattern for the future, and then it's not the Example but the Law that we are bound to follow, which cannot be said of the examples before alledged; which besides the general insufficiency of examples in matter of proof touch not the point of Resistance in question, except the first, which is wholly contrary to it.

Which is the example of David, who being persecuted by Saul, took six hundred men for his Guard; this might suffice for Answer, that this action is not recommended by the word of God, nor proposed as an example for us to follow; Christian piety and prudence, may imitate many actions of holy persons which are not formally recommended in the word of God; but the question being to exempt us from a prohibition, and a formal threatening, one of the most considerable and penal in all the Scripture, we may receive no example to the contrary, if it be not expressly recommended

and turned into a command ; and besides, the last command ought to have the Advantage and to be obeyed before the first.

Moreover, extraordinary Cases in Scripture, wherein there is a Miraculous and Prophe-tick Conduct, cannot serve for a pattern in Ordinary Cases ; David was Anointed King over Israel, by a special command of God, and in all the List of the Kings of Judah there were none, but Saul and David called to the kingdom in this manner. And this holy unction gave him privileges in Israel, which were onely proper to him, and which the Gentlemen of the Covenant have not in England, for Ordinary Cases there are perpetual and inviolable precepts, and these precepts are wholly contrary to the resisting of Sovereigns by Arms.

Our Enemies nevertheless challenge a particular Interest in this example of David, because they account themselves the Anointed of the Lord, but deny this Title to their King, if he be not one of the Elect of God ; but let them learn, that that which renders Kings the Anointed of the Lord, is not true Faith nor the Gifts of the Spirit, but that Sovereign power which they have from on high.

Isa. 44. 28. And therefore Cyrus a Pagan King is called by God himself his Anointed, and his Shepherd : If then Kings are the Anointed of the Lord, without consideration of their Religion or vertue, it follows then that they lose not their unction, neither by their Errors nor their vices ; and that that falling from the grace of God, yet they fall not from that power which they held of him. This is spoken of by the way against the Heresie of most part of the Covenanters, who deny the Divine unction of Kings, and fasten it to their fantasies in Religion.

And we have cause to give thanks to these men who alledge to us the example of David, there being nothing in all the Scripture more contrary to them, for in stead that they pursued the King with weapons in their hands and gave him Battel, David fled continually from place to place, and never stroke one stroke, nor drew his Sword against his King. Twice he let him escape when he had him in his power, and having taken away his speare, restored it to him again; and having but cut of the Lap of his Garment, his heart smote him for it; and when one counsell'd him to dispatch him, then when he was in his hands, he said, The Lord forbid that I should do this thing unto my Master, the Lords Anointed, to stretch forth my hand against him, seeing he is the Anointed of the Lord. And when his Servants would have slain him, he saith, Destroy him not: for who can stretch forth his hand against the Lords Anointed, and be guiltless? This Divine Title bound his hands, and possessed his spirit with fear and astonishment.

And since our Enemies make him to say that he would not stretch forth his hand against the King, if he descended not in Battel against him; let them well read the Text, but especially in the Original, and they shall find no such thing; David doth rather put Vers. 10. Saul wholly into the hands of God, the Lord shall smite him, or his day shall come to die, or he shall descend into the Battel and perish; The Lord forbid that I should stretch forth my hand against the Lords Anointed:

 He doth not say that he will not stretch forth his hand against him, unless that the Lord smite him; for if God smite him, what need had David to smite him? He doth not say he would descend into Battel against him, for there his Actions would have contradicted his Words, for he alwayes fled from him; the Event proved that his words were propheticall, and that he waited whilest Saul should be slain in a strange War, and that the hand of the Lord should be upon him.

And if David never gave him Battel, we cannot impute it to his weakness; for he might as well have defeated the Army of Saul, as that of the Philistines before Keilah with his small number; if God who guided him in all his wayes had found it good, since it had been easie for him to have raised mighty Armies, being designed the Successor of Saul in the Kingdome; for people naturally adore the Rising Sun.

David retired into Keilah, and having heard that Saul had an intention to come thither to take him, enquired of the Lord, if those in the City would deliver him up to Saul, and God having answered him, that they would deliver him, fled from thence; the Ministers therefore of the Covenant infer that

David had a desire to fortifie Keilah, and to endure a Siege; but all which they can gather from that passage is, that David was not safe in that retreat, and that God advised him to seek another, for the Inhabitants of Keilah might have delivered him to Saul without attending a Seige; but when they shall have proved that David would have fortified Keilah, it makes nothing for them, since God declares by his Answer that it was not pleasing to him.

We would beseech the Gentlemen of the Covenant to hold themselves to this example which they have chosen, that they would Cashier their great Armies, for David had but a few people with them; that they would not rob the Subjects of their King, of their Goods, but imitate the Souldiers of David, who were a Wall both by night and day to the Flocks and Herds of Nabal; that having seised upon the Arms of the King, let them peaceably restore them again as David, and not with the points forward. Let their Conscience strike them, and make them cry out, The Lord forbid that I should do this thing against my Master the Lords Anointed, for who can stretch forth his hand against him and be guiltless? words which beside the example carry with them a perpetual and expresse command, and shall one day be produced in judgment against those that defend the late Commotions by the example of David: and if their continuance in the Kingdomes of his Majesty, is either displeasing or dangerous to them, in stead of opposing him, let them retire into some strange Country, as David did to King Achis; let them also imitate his sincerity in making use of strangers onely for his protection, and not seek into other Countries to raise his Subjects against their King, which is that use the Covenanters employed the Scots; In one point onely they imitate and surpass David, in that he fained himself a Fool, for they indeed act the Fools in good earnest.

In brief, the Example of David which they alledge, is so contrary to the Actions of the Covenanters, that they have great reason to fear lest God alledge this at the Dreadful day of Judgment against them; saying, Out of thy own mouth will I Judge thee, thou wicked servant: The other passages of Scripture are most ridiculously alledged, and serve only to shew their great weakness.

They bring the Action of the Army of I Sam. 14. Saul, that saved Jonathan against the Oath of his Father; but to what purpose is this? doth this Army draw their sword against the King? use they any violence either against his Person or Estate? If a King would put to death his Innocent Son, those faithful Subjects whom the King employ in this Execution do well not to do it, and to refuse giving Obedience to so unjust a Command.

They make use also of the example of Ehud, who slew Eglon King of Moab, who kept the Israelites in slavery; we have often heard this example pressed with much vehemency in Pulpits. The Preachers compared pared Eglon to the King, affirming that Eglon was the lawful King of Israel, and that it is lawful to kill a Legitimate King, if he oppresses the people of God; all this is false, and proper to be refuted onely by the Hangman, to whom we leave them.

The Example follows of the City of Libnah, which appertained to the Levites, which revolted from the Obedience of Jehoram, because (saith the Text) he had forsaken the Lord God of his Fathers; the Covenanters apply the word Because to the intention of the Inhabitants of Libnah, and not to the judgment of God; whence these Gentlemen conclude that it is lawful for the people to shake off the yoke of their Prince, when the Prince forsakes God, of which they will be Judges. - Although Libnah should revolt for this reason, yet it follows not that the reason is of strength, or that it ought to be turned into example, a thing which requires a new proof of Scripture; but the drift of the Text is, to assign the cause of this Revolt, to the Justice of God, and not to that of men: Take the whole Text; So the Edomites revolted from 2 chr. 21. under the hand of Judah unto this day. The 10. same time also did Libnah revolt from under his hand, because he had forsaken the Lord God of his Fathers. Having consulted with the Original, we find that the Revolt of Edom and of Libnah were both together, without the least distinction; but between the discourse of these two Revolts and the reason adjoyned, there is * there the usual Accentus Athnach. mark mark for the distinction of half periods : which shews that this reason serves equally for both the Revolts, and the sense of the Text carries it evidently, that the Idumeans and those of Libnah revolted for the same cause, and that these Idumeans which were Idolaters, had no ground to revolt from the King of Judah, because at that time he was also fallen into Idolatry ; It's therefore the Divine Justice that the Text regards, and not to the Motives of second Causes.

Also the same Author saith, that Pekah the Son of Remaliah slew in Judah 120000 in one day, which were all valiant men, because they had forsaken the Lord God of their Fathers. In these two passages the sense is alike, and the reason of the punishment couched in the same Terms ; now it's most evident that the Syrians had no Quarrel against the Jews for forsaking God, because they did not believe in him, wherefore we are to look to Justice of the King of Kings, who for the sins of Princes suffers them to lose the Obedience of their Subjects ; for God serves himself of the wickedness of men, whereof he is not the cause for to execute his just judgments ; but that excuseth not the Rebellion of Subjects, for it is their part to consider what they owe to their King, and not what their King deserves of the Justice of God. They add the example of Jehu, who exterminated the 2 King. 9. King of Israel, and all the posterity of Ahab, in which without doubt he did very well, because God commanded him, but the

the Covenanters did very ill in persecuting their King, because God had forbidden them: After this they bring the Execution of the Queen Athaliah, by the Command of Jehoadab the High Priest, which no more then 18. the former toucheth the Question; for not onely Jehoadab, but all other people might have done as much, because there was a lawful King, whom they ought to defend and maintain against a stranger usurping, and that had murdered the Royal Family; and here the Maxime is valid, That against a publick Enemy, every one hath right to take up Armes: But what conclude they from these two last examples, they would have been ashamed to name them before the death of their King, but since they have explained themselves, God defend the holiness of his word, and confound this Divellish Divinity.

Those that follow are not much better; they alledge the example of the Priests, who resisted King Uzziah, when he would have exercised the Priests Office, so ought the Ministers of the Gospel to resist the King if he would administer the Sacraments; but this resistance ought to be done by humble admonitions, and as refusing to serve him in his design, not by way of Armes: In the matter of Uzziah, the Priests used not any violence, it is said indeed they caused him to go out of the Temple, because God had smitten him with the Leprosie; but that was done without force, for the Text saith, vers. 29. he himself also hastened to go out, because

the Lord had smitten him : This serves nothing for their subject, they have no other reason to alledge this, but because having quarrelled against all Kings, they take delight to blatt their Dignity. The like is the example of Elisha, who commanded the dore to be shut against the messenger that was sent from Joram to cut off his head ;

2 King. 2. if Elisha had sent a messenger to cut of the
32. Kings Head, the example had been to the purpose, for this is our Case at this day ; but to shut the dore against an Officer of the Kings to save his life, being condemned to die wrongfully, and without force of Justice, is very far from attempting either against the Person or Authority of the King : The English Law in many Cases gives to every one his house for a place of safety, neither is their any Law either Divine or Humane, that forbids us to defend a blow from what part soever it comes ; if the Covenanters had done no other thing, there never had been a War, but they proceeded further then defence ; was there ever a more important Action upon so smal a foundation, to persecute their King by Sea and Land, destroy his Estate, plant their Cannon against his Person, imprison him, and at last ——— because Elisha caused the dore to be shut against the messenger of Joram.

Judges 5. But in recompense, behold here two
23. proofs, wherein there is as much piety as reason, Deborah cursed the Inhabitants of Jerem. 48. Meroz, because they came not forth to help

cursed them that kept their sword from shed- Judg. 20.

 are all they that came not to help the Co- Jerem. 48.
 venanters against the King: For these rare 10.
 consequences they deserve a bundle of Thistles, such as Asses feed on, and to be driven from the society of men, as being deprived both of Reason and Humanity: who hath given them power to stretch to the King either by words or actions, the judgments pronounced against the enemies of God, and which are restrained to certain Nations and persons: The King, was he a Moabite? was he a Pagan? or an usurper of a Kingdome, as Iabin? Are your Prophets as De- borah and Ieremy, to curse with Authority?
 If ye be not Prophets, ye are Sacrilegious, for Cursing is a Fire that appertains onely to God to cast forth, they who are so bold to take it into their hands without Authority burn them, and hurt none but themselves, but oftentimes doth good to them whom they would hurt; for this Rashness moves God to Ielousie, and provokes him to do the contrary, according to the Psalmist, Psal.
109. Let them curse, but do thou bless; we have great hopes that our enemies shall be the Occasion of the blessing of God upon us, since they take such pains to curse us;
 it is the constant Argument of their Sermons and publick Prayers, to it they employ the vehemency of their Eloquence and fervour of their Devotion; Let us then say 2 Sam. 16.
 with David, It may be the Lord will look 12.
 upon our Affliction, and that the Lord will requite

requite good for their cursing; but let us bless them that persecute us, and despitefully use us: O our God! turn their Hearts, and bless their Persons, and as our Lord Jesus by his prayer on the Cross saved them which crucified him, save we beseech thee all those that crucifie him in his members, and those who killing us think they do God service.

CHAP. III.

Express Texts of Scripture which Commands Obedience, and forbids Resistance to Sovereigns.

FOR to draw them from Examples and particular Cases, which is their retreat, to general Precepts, we beseech them as they love God and their own Salvation, to renew their proofs, and consider that in all the Scripture there is neither Precepts nor Permission that Authorizeth the taking up of Arms against their Sovereign, but there are very many formal Commands to the contrary.

The first Commandement, Honour thy Father and thy Mother, binds us to honour the King; for in the beginning Sovereignty appertained to Fathers, and is derived of the paternal Power, now it is impossible to Honour the King and draw your sword against him; upon which we observe that

in

in Case of Idolatry, the Father was commanded by the King to accuse his Son and Daughter, and the Husband his Wife, and to stretch forth first his hand against them to slay them; but neither the Son nor the Daughter ought to accuse the Father, nor the Wife the Husband, much less to put forth their hand against them: whence we learn, that neither Children nor Subjects, ought to rise up against their Fathers or their Kings, which have in them the paternal Character, no not for the Service of God; and that their Persons ought to be inviolable; those who confess this truth, and yet in the mean while separate the Authority of the King from his Person, deny that which they have confessed, and expose the Person of the King to violence; for it is the Authority that renders the Persons of Kings inviolable.

Therefore amongst so many Reprehensions and Judgments against Idolatrous Kings, whereof the holy History is full, ye shall in no place nor part find that the people are reproved for not depressing or deposing their King; ordinarily the punishment that God sent upon them came immediately from himself, or out of the Kingdome, not by their own Subjects: before God would employ Jehu, who was a Subject to destroy the Kings of Israel and Judah, he Anointed him King, and besides gave him a special and extraordinary Command.

We say the like of Jeroboam, whose Example is very ill alledged to defend Rebellion, bellion, for Jeroboam was sent of God to take the Kingdome from Rehoboam, and was Authorized by a Formal donation. The sentence of David before mentioned, is of very great weight. Who can stretch forth his hand against the Lords Anointed, and be guiltlesse.

And this other of him, Touch not mine Anointed, and do my Prophets no harm: but the Covenanters have violently and cruelly proceeded against both.

God speaking under the Name of Sovereign Wisdome, saith, By me Kings Reign, and Princes decree Justice. By me Princes Rule, and Nobles, even all the Judges of the Earth. If it be by him that Kings Reign, they should be respected for love of him, and he that resists them makes against God.

To this purpose also tends that excellent Scripture. My Son, fear thou the Lord, and the King, and meddle not with them that are given to change. For their calamity shall rise suddenly, and who knoweth the ruine of them both? A Scripture which shews, that the fear of the King, is a part of the fear of God, and that those that rise up against him, are reserved of God for a sudden calamity.

And this also is of him, I Counsel you to keep the Kings Commandement, and that in regard of the Oath of God. A passage that binds us to keep the Commandement of the King, for the Love of God, and the Oath of Allegiance, under which all Subjects are born, and many have actually taken; for every Oath is a contract made with God. And

And a little after, Where the word of the Eccl. 8.14.
King is, there is power; and, who may say unto him what dost thou? But we have to do with those, who make this Question to their King, and care neither for his word nor power.

The Law speaks expresly, Thou shalt not Exod. 22.
revile the Judges, nor curse the Ruler of thy 28. people. Yea, it restraines the thoughts as well as Actions, Curse not the King, no not in Eccles. 10.
thy Thoughts; if we are not to speak nor 20.
 think ill of the King, much less should do ill to him; the violation of these Commands by the Covenanters are too enormous, and cry aloud to heaven for vengeance.

Our Lord Jesus Christ himself Commands us, to Render to Caesar the things which are Matth. 22.
Caesars; and to God, the things that are Gods. He 21.
 himself would pay tribute to Caesar, although of right he should have made Caesar Tributary to him; and not having mony he caused it to be brought to him by a Winde rather then he would be wanting in this duty;
 this is far from taking the Kings Revenues from him, and employing the Tribute due to him, to raise a War against him.

When the Officers of Justice came to Matth. 26.
take him, he rebuked his Disciple who had drawn his sword against them, and healed the wound that he had made; he suffered himself peaceably to be led before Herod and Pilate, whom he might have easily destroyed, as make them fall down backward who came to apprehend him; but he submitted to the Divine Authority that shined in the person of the Governour, yea even to death; Openly professing that the power which he had was from above: If the power of Kings depended upon the gift of their Subjects, as the Covenanters held, Jesus Christ should have said that the power that he had was from below; but this Divinity proceeds from another Doctor then the Son of God.

1, &c.

Saint Paul is marvellous expresse and full upon this point, Let every soul be subject unto the high Powers, for there is no power but of God. The Powers that be, are ordained of God. Who-soever therefore resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordinance of God: and they that resist, shall receive to themselves damnation. For Rulers are not a terrour to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the Power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same. For he is the minister of God to thee for good: but if thou do that which is evil, be afraid: for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not onely for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For, for this cause pay you tribute also: for they are Gods ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues, Tribute to whom Tribute is due, Custome to whom Custome, Fear to whom Fear, Honour to whom Honour.

Oh! behold with what vigour of spirit and power the Apostle presseth Obedience, and condemns Resistance of Sovereign Powers; is there any thing in the world so strong and pressing as this Divine Lesson, the Authority alone had been sufficient, but over and above he adds Threatnings, promises reason upon reason; they who shall well consider the Text, will learn; That it is impossible to be a good Christian, without being a good Subject, and that they cannot resist the King without resisting God; also that terrible threatening of Damnation should retain men in their duty: Let every one (in the fear of God) that have born Armes against their King, think well of this, and repent: Oh! it is a dangerous thing to resist God, he must be very imprudent that will hazard the Damnation of his soul, so formally denounced against Rebels, upon distinctions, and good intentions, at the great day of account they will find these very light things. The Divines of the Covenant labour with might and main to Elude the force of this Scripture, which plucks them by the Throat, they change themselves into many contrary formes to escape it, as we shall see hereafter.
and

Saint Paul recommends this Doctrine to Titus, Put them in mind to be subject to <sup>Tit. 3. 1, 2.</sup> Principalities and Powers, to obey Magistrates, to be ready to every good work; to speak evil of no man, to be no Brawlers, shewing all meekness to all men. A dangerous Scripture, to teach subjection and meekness, is <sup>1 Pet. 2. 13, &c.</sup> to strike the Covenanters at the Heart.

Saint Peter speaks in the same style, Submit your selves to every Ordinance of man for the Lord sake, whether it be to the King as supreme

supreme; or unto Governours, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evill doers, and the praise of them that do well, for so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men. As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God. Honour all men. Love the Brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the King. The rest of the Chapter is employed in teaching Christians to submit to their Superiours, and to suffer for righteousness: Behold truly the Doctrine of Christ, it's thus that the Apostles planted the Church, it's thus that they fought the good fight, not in killing Kings, but in bearing the Cross for the Gospel.

One of ours having requested a learned Divine that followed the party of the Covenanters, that he would give him a precept of Scripture, where it's commanded for Subjects to take up Arms for Religion against their Sovereign: He returned this Scripture, Stand Gal. 5. 1. fast therefore in the Liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. But we maintain against him that both Saint Peter and Saint Paul preserved themselves more steadfast in their Christian liberty in suffering death, then all the Armies of the Covenanters in Fighting, and that they take the wayes not to establish, but to shake and overthrow their liberty in Christ: we need not prove that Saint Paul in this Scripture never went to speak of Fighting, but to preserve the spirit free from superstition. Christian Liberty consists not in shaking off the yoke of Superiour Powers,

Powers, but of that of Error and Vice; and that Liberty which our enemies have Assumed, to present their Petitions to their King upon their Pikes point, and in the end to kill him, was not the Liberty from which Christ had made them free: Let them learn the Lesson of Saint Peter, to carry themselves as free, and not using their Liberty for a cloak of Maliciousness.

CHAP. IV.

The Evasions of the Covenanters upon the Texts of Saint Paul, Rom. 13. And how in time they refuse the Judgment of Scripture.

THE Apostle Commands, That every Soul be subject to the higher Powers, for there is no power but of God. The Powers that be, are ordained of God. Rom. 13.1.

To this Scripture some of them Answer, that evill Kings are not ordained of God, having learned this Doctrine of Goodman. Goodman but therein they directly contradict Saint of Obedi. Paul, who spake of the Powers then in be-ence. ing, they that were then when Saint Paul. At Some wrote this Epistle, were one of the three Emperors. Nero's Successors of Tyberius, the best of them were nothing worth; a Child is capable to distinguish betwixt the wickedness of a Prince, and his Authority; the first whereof is of himself, the second is of God, and it's of the power that Saint Paul speaks of, without distinction of persons.

As for the following verse where Saint Paul infers thus, Whosoever therefore resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. Buchanan and his followers Answer, That this Command was but for a time, whilst the Church was in it's Infancy weak, and under the Cross, incapable to resist their Prince; but if Saint Paul had lived now, and were to write a body of Commonwealth, he would speak far otherwise, and would leave Kings to be punished of their Subjects, and this is that Buchanan assures us upon his word.

Likewise one of the best writers of the Covenanters affirm, that Saint Paul spake to some particulars dispersed in the Condition of the Primitive Church, who had not means to provide for their safety; if this Licence were Lawful, men might reject all the Doctrines of Saint Paul's Epistles, as written to particulars, and the Masters of the Covenant would make a way to exempt themselves from many duties Commanded by Saint Paul, which would very ill accord with their intentions: So when the Apostle saith, Let Love be without Dissimulation, abhorre that which is evill, cleave to that which is good, be kindly affectionate one to another, with brotherly love preserving one another, there is some appearance that they take this Command addressed to some particulars

ticulars, and not to them, since they give themselves the liberty to do the quite contrary: There is in these Epistles some Commands provisional, moveable according to the Times and Persons, as those which concern the outrace Order; others which are purely personal, as the Command made to Timothy, to come to him before Winter; but the Moral Doctrines are moveable, and vary not according to the Times, since that reason of Saint Paul given, that the Powers that be, are ordained of God, is a Truth perpetual and universal, and the Command not to resist the Powers, ought also to be General, for all Ages and all people; so likewise this reason is perpetual, That the Magistrate beareth not the sword in vain, but to do justice; and this other ye must needs be subject not onely for wrath, but also for conscience sake: wherefore the Command grounded hereon to be subject to the higher powers, and not resist them, is of perpetual necessity and obligation. And since to resist the powers is to resist the Ordinance of God, may we not ask of our New Divines, why the strong and not the weak are permitted to resist the Ordinance of God? It's enough to have a good sword to exempt a man from the Commands of the Gospel.

The Covenanters might defend this Interpretation of the Text of Saint Paul, by the Authoity of Cardinal Bellarmine, who saith, that if the Christians long since did not depose New Dioclesian Iulian, the Apostate Valens, the Arrien and others, it was because they wanted temporal forces, otherwise of right they might, which is the Language of our Covenanters ; but this Opinion draws along with it three Inconveniences.

First, that it blasts the primitive Church, and deprives the Martyrs of their Honour ; for it's little worth praise to suffer for the Gospel, when a man hath a Will without Means to Rebell : their Obedience to their Sovereigns was then nothing worth, since it was forced, and all their protestations of Subjection in the writings of the Fathers, of which they are full, ought to be imputed to Weakness and Hypocrisie.

This likewise is to accuse Saint Paul of want of sincerity, as if he taught Patience and Obedience to Kings, onely to accommodate himself to the Times, and not to Obey God ; but he clears himself sufficiently of this accusation, saying, that we must not onely be subject for wrath, that is to say, for fear of punishment, but also for conscience.

Moreover this Doctrine is pernicious to the Church, for if it were embraced, it would render Christians suspected, and hateful to their Sovereigns ; as persons who would subject the conscience of their Prince to theirs, and submits to them onely out of weakness, and waite only an occasion to cast off their yoke, which would oblige Kings ever to keep them weak, and to impose heavy burdens upon them, and so prevent their rising.

Also this Doctrine is pernicious to the proprofession of the Gospel, for it would much hinder the Conversion of Pagan Kings, since that turning Christians, according to the Mode, they should lose their Authority, there being no Pagan Religion, which teacheth Subjects to resist their Prince by Arms; which would also induce Christian Kings of a diverse Religion to hinder with all their might the Conversion of their Subjects: Blessed be God that there are none but the Jesuites and Covenanters that maintain so destructive an Opinion: The Reformed Churches, and the most part of the Roman Church give no jealousy to their Princes hereupon.

The holy prudence of the Apostles saw well, that even besides Conscience, the counsel the most profitable for the Conservation of the Church, and the Propagation of the Gospel, was to subject themselves wholly to their Sovereigns and without any Reservation, but to suffer for righteousness sake, rather than disobey God; for hereby the principal hinderance was removed, namely, that shadow which the Enemies of the Gospel made the Emperours to apprehend that this Doctrine which spread so fast would bring along with it an Alteration in their Estates, and that the Christians waited but the coming of a King, that would break in pieces all other Kings, and have for his possession the ends of the Earth; it's that which Saint Peter had regard unto, where he exhorteth Believers:

man for the Lords sake, that in all well doing ye may put to silence the Ignorance of foolish men. By this manner of Subjection whole States were converted, and in the end patience overcame: For the Christians of the first Ages have made appear by their piety and moderation, that the Kingdome whither they aspired was not of this world, neither did in any thing diminish the rights of Monarchs, but rather strengthened their Authority, binding their Subjects anew by Conscience, ye so far as to make whole Armies of valiant men that had power in their hands to lay down their necks rather then to draw their swords against their Emperour; so did the Christian Souldiers under Maximinian, who would have constrained them to sacrifice to his Idols.

The Armies of the English and Scottish Covenanters are not capable of this Doctrine; these Northern people are impatient Libertines and Haughty, they will form a Gospel according to the Ayre of their Climate.

Their other crafty Evasion is not much better, that Saint Paul forbids to disobey the power of the King, but not to his person; but the Text is formally against this, for the Apostle by Power doth not understand a Quality without a Subject, but fastens it to the Person, saying in vers. 6. that the Prince is the minister of God, and that he bears not the sword in vain, and that they are Ordained of God to do Justice. And he speaks vers. 6. of Princes in the plural number, ber, they are Gods Ministers attending continually upon this very thing.

'Tis the style of Saint Paul to call the Angels, who excell in Power, Principalities and Powers: When he speaks, Ephes. 3. 10. That the manifold wisdom of God, might be known to Principalities and Powers in heavenly places; It appears that he speaks not of Accidents, but of Persons, for they are the Persons and not the Titles, that are capable of knowledge.

Now I would fain know of these men, what this Person is that it is lawful to resist? If it be the person of the King, or supreme Magistrate, whilst it is joyned to his Power, they resist the power in the person; and if it be the person separated from the power, they must needs before resist either the one or the other for to make this violent separation.

And seeing that the Covenanters maintain that the Authority of the King resides in their Choyce those that draw the sword against them may return the same Answer, and say that is they resist not the Authority but their Persons; but the Oath of Allegiance, and that of supremacy, which are imposed by Act of Parliament, cause all these subtleties to vanish, for men take these Oaths to the person of the King, and not to his power or to his supremacy separated from him.

Moreover this distinction is contradicted by another, which hath been frequent a long time in their mouths, that they resisted not the King, but his Armies; which signifies nifies in effect, that they resisted not the person or King, but his power; for his power laid in his Armies, and as it is the nature of a lye to enter far; these people who say they are Licenced by Saint Paul to oppose the Person of the King, and not his Power, were marvellously impatient when they were told they fought against the King; and affirmed that they fought for him and defended his Person, which doubtless seems to be spoken to move laughter and indignation; but God cannot be mocked, nor Conscience wholly blinded, by their impatience; hereupon they reſtifie that their Conscience makes their process, and dictates to them within, that to bear Arms against the King, is to sin against God, and Nature.

It's a notable sumptome of a desperate sick State where the Reason of a people is smitten with astonishment, whereof we have a most lamentable example, for was there ever such a Capricious madness, to accuse the Royal Majesty of Treason, to make Edicts by the King against the King, to swear a Covenant for defence of the King, which nevertheless obligeeth them to make war against him, and the King being alive, to forge a Platonick Idea of the same King, residing fifty miles from himself, that so they might fight against the Person of the King. There is no Cymera, nor fantastical humor like this! Behold the work of the Spirit, that now works efficaciously in the Children of Disobedience. Behold another Evasion, The Apostle (say they) doth not teach us who who is the Superior Power, but that it is the Superior Power that we must obey, and therefore they strive to form in the Kingdom a Superior Power above the King, a thing contrary to the Constitution of this Monarchy, as I hope to make appear.

It's easie to gather which is the Superior Power which St. Paul understands, for he expresses it himself, It's the Power that bears the Sword, vers. 3. and He to whom Tribute is paid, Psal. 7. Rights that appertain to the King alone, and which were actually possessed by the Emperour, where St. Paul wrote this Epistle: that which they alledge against this, that the Emperour then was more absolute than the Kings at present, is false, but he was much more limited; Suetonius that lived under Trajan puts amongst the Enormities of Caligula, to have been very near Changing the form of Government (which was a Principallitie) into a Kingdom, and to place the Diadem upon his head. And the Learned called not the power of these Emperours Regnum but Principatus; and were this allegation true, yet it would be far from the purpose; for be it that the Emperour should be more or less absolute than our Kings, the command of St. Paul is always the same, That we must not resist him that bears the Sword, and to whom Custome is due, because his Authority is of God.

This other starting hole is of the same stiffe, they say that the defence not to resist Supreme Powers obligeth only Particulars, and not the States of a Kingdome; this is to make another Gospel for the General than for the Particulars ; as if they should say the Commandements of God are directed to every one but not to all , which is to overthrow common Sense, since the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacie are imposed upon all the States of England , whereby they are bound also in Generall ; none sit in Parliament that takes not their Oaths at his entrance , neither is it in their power to overthrow without and against the King that which is established by the King sitting in Parliament.

Also this is a thing that never entred into the spirits of the English before the times of this Epidemicall phrensie , that the Kings Rights which makes the Estates to assemble, and the deputation of the people that sends them , should exempt their Deputies or Parliament men from the duty of Subjects, and absolve them of their Oath of Allegiance and St. Pauls Command. The Text of St. Paul according to the Greek requires that every Soul should be subject ; If so be then that their Deputies or Parliament men have no Souls , they are not bound to give obedience to the King.

When we reason thus, our adversaries are extraordinarily moved, and would take this matter out of the hands of the Clergie, saying that the Lawyers and not the Divines are to decide where the Supreme power of the State rests , whether it be in the Person of the King or the People, and with what limitations the King ought to be obeyed , and that the Apostle requiring an obedience to supreme Powers intends an obedience according to the Laws, and their Laws are every where different, and that one and the same rule of Scripture cannot serve for all Kingdoms; that the Kingdome of England not being formed as the Kingdome of Israel, or the Romane Empire, the Commands of the Old and New Testament alledged, toucheth not the present Quarrel.

Now are they not ashamed to forbid our Clergie to discourse of Politicall affaires, whilest the Gentlemen of the Barr take upon them to teach Divinitie to the Clergie, and by infinite books as their processees, stir up the people too by tumultuous Reasons of Religion, to uphold staggering Consciences in the duty of Obedience and Christian Concord, and to defend the Truth of God by our sufferances, as we have endeavoured to do; It's not to meddle in the affaires of State, but to discharge our Consciences, and to keep that good thing which God hath committed unto us, we cannot be accused to intrude our selves into the Civill Government, as their Ministers, who serve as Agents and Factors in publique Affairs.

It's henceforth the duty of Divines to handle this point of State, for the Lawyers and Statesmen of the Covenant, who having lately built their New policy upon a New Divinity of their fashion, have forced the Divines to become Politicians, at least so far as to defend true Divinitie from the crime of disobedience, since they press us for Conscience

Conscience to joyn with them to resist the King, they must satisfie our Consciences; that the fundamental Lawes of the Kingdom require us so to do. But if they would that Divines rest themselves upon the faith of the Lawyers in the point of Resistance, upon which there is no less penalty than Damnation, it is to impress an implicit faith; and blind obedience upon those that preach the Contrary.

Without exceeding then the limits of our vocation, we do acknowledge that the Apostle requires an Obedience, according to the Laws of the State, not only of the State of Rome, but of every other form of Government; and we deny, that there may not be found in Scripture a Rule of obedience, which serves for all sorts of Estates, for such is that of the present Text, That every soul should be subject to the Higher Powers, and that he that resisteth the Powers resisteth the Ordinance of God, and thereby shall receive to himself damnation; the reason inserted between these two sentences do manifestly regard all formes of States, That there are no Powers but they be of God, and the Powers that are, are ordained of God; therefore the Command that goes before and after appertains to all sorts of Government: Let every one be subject to the power, and let none resist the power and threatnings; also which is the terriblest of all Threatnings, That those that resist the Powers, shall receive to themselves Damnation.

Saint Peter wills us to be subject to every Ordinance

Ordinance of man for the Lords sake, that is, we are to subject our selves to every form of Government lawfully established, and to perswade our selves that that Ordinance is of God: Generally the Scriptures before alledged, oblige all persons of all Estates to yield obedience to him, and those in whom the Supreme Power resides; and there cannot be brought any valuable reason why it is more lawful to resist the Supreme Power in England, then in Israel or in Rome.

Indeed, if they could produce a fundamental Law of the Kingdome, that did permit the people of England in certain Cases to take up Arms against the King, they had some reason then to say that Saint Paul did not forbid the English to resist their Prince beyond the Nature of their Laws, as the Melchior: Princes of Germany, when they took up Goladast: Arms against the Emperour, produced the Tom. 3. p. 124. Golden Bull of Charles the fourth, and the Imperial Capitulation, for by it they were expressly permitted to make war against him, if he attempted any thing against their ancient Composition; although I account that this Capitulation could not be made without contradicting the Command of the Apostle, for Histories mention that the Emperour was reduced to it by the threatnings and means of the Pope: but now by long prescription, the Empire is not that it was, and it's a point disputable what is the Supreme Power in divers States of Germany.

'Tis that which but of late hath been put to the Question in England, and was never disputed disputed before the year 1642, where the Supreme Power of the Kingdome resides, unless when the Crown was in dispute between two Princes; The Kings Enemies employed all their forces to prove that the Soveraign Authority appertained to the people, to evade the Text of Saint Paul and other Texts of Scripture, which did marvellously incommode their affairs, imitating those that alter the Lock of their doors, when the Key is in possession of their Adversary; for beholding to their great Regret, that the Scripture is wholly ours, commanding obedience, and strictly forbidding resistance to Soveraigns, yea under pain of Damnation, they labour with all their might to change the Nature of the State, that thereby the rules of subjection contained in the Scripture might be of no use.

p. 21.

One of their Authors, of whom they make great account, affirms boldly, that the passages in Scripture against resisting the Supreme Power are of no force, but in simple and absolute Monarchies, as that of the Jews and Romans, and do no wayes touch ours: This is a clean shaver, who cuts the knot that he cannot untie: wherein he imitates the ingenuity of Buchanan, who having taught Subjects to punish their King, and feeling himself pressed by Conscience, which suggested to him, that the Scripture was wholly contrary to it, prevents the objection that might be made by maintaining that it's ill inferred to say that the thing is unlawful, because there is no such thing or the like found in Scripture.

These

These their Confessions are very remarkable, and indeed most strange coming from Christians, who should rather frame their policy to the Scripture, then reject the Scripture, because it contradicts the policy they would establish: They have found out an invention to cast off the yoke of their King, which is to cast off that of the word of God. After this so open a profession, it's against all equity they should make use of Scripture for their cause, either in their Writings or Sermons: They alledge nothing but examples, but there is no reason that the examples should be made use of by them who reject the Commands, but after they have turned themselves into as many postures as a Fencer, to defend themselves against the invincible Text of the Apostle, in the end hither they are driven to refuse wholly to debate the difference touching their duty to their King by the Commands of Scripture. The last figure of Proleus is the Natural, and after all their tricks of Lying and Hypocrisie at last their Nature shews it self. In fine, when all is said, this is the only Answer on which they rest, that the Commands of Scripture cannot determine the point of their Resistance, and that we must have recourse to the Lawyers. This speech is commonly in the mouths of all the wisest of their party, and let all Christian Churches take notice of this their most shamefull Evasion.

CHAP. V.

What Constitution of State the Covenanters forge, and how they refuse the Judgment of the Laws of the Kingdom.

TO elude the strength of Humane Laws as well as Divine, they forge a primitive and fundamental Constitution of this Estate, destitute of all Authority both of God or man.

And here we must distinguish between their Doctrine they taught in the beginning of their Covenant, and that which they taught afterwards; for then when they were to fight with the King in the field, and were not yet capable of so high hopes as afterwards they effected; they forged a form of State suitable to their possibility then, which was to constrain the King by the Terror of their Arms to accord to all that should please them, and wholly to put the Government into their hands; notwithstanding their principles then led them to those Conclusions which since followed, for they supposed that the Sovereign Power was in-

inherent in the People, that the People Elected the King, and had committed to him the Authority that he Exercised, reserving to themselves the Power to assume it again when the State should judge it most convenient; and to take away the sword of Justice and the Militia, to make use of it against him if there were need. That the King had not the Supreme Power but by Paction, which being once broke by him, the Subjects were exempted from their Obedience, that he was onely Depositorie of the Supremacie, but when the Estates were assembled the Supremacy was joyntly possessed by him and the two Houses; so that the King had but the thirds, and that but very hardly, for they held that the States had a Negative voyce, and the King could do nothing without their consent; and whether the King had the Negative voyce of right they were not agreed, but all accorded to take it away from him in effect, that is to say, after their account that the People might refuse the King what displeased them; but if the King denied what the People propounded to him, they esteemed that the two Houses might and ought to do it without him, and force him to it by Arms; and this Doctrine have been Confirmed by their practise or, to speak the truth, this their practise hath occasioned this Doctrine.

Now since God through his secret and incomprehensible Judgements, hath suffered the wickedness of this Age to have success above their desires, they built upon these principles this Conclusion, that the People may Judge and Execute their King, dissolve the Monarchie for ever, and turn it into an Aristocracy or popular Government; for yet they cannot agree to which they should hold themselves, since then they would persuade us that the Constitution of the English Government, exempts us from these two great dangers, Disobedience to God, and Dammning our Souls in resisting the King; and since they would oblige us for Conscience sake to oppose the King in obedience to God and the higher Powers, and that our Clergie are commanded to Exhort the people that God hath commanded them to draw their Swords against their Sovereign; There is a Necessity to satisfie our Reason, and resolve our Consciences hereupon, to enquire whether the Nature of the State be such as they have painted it out to us.

And for this we have not referred our selves to those of the Royal party, but have consulted with the most Judicious writers of the Covenanters, who pass amongst them as Oracles of the State, expecting that for proof of this form of Government they would have produced the old Records of the Kingdome, which are now in their Custodie, the ancient Statutes of Parliaments, and the Testimony of their old Historians; but they alledge no such things, though much pressed thereunto by their Adversaries, onely they make a discourse in the Ayre upon the Law of Nature, that hath given to every person, and by Consequent to every Estate a power power for his preservation; troubling the ignorant Readers brains with Barbarous terms, and thorny destructions, and extracting the Quintessence of the State into an Fullers invisible substance: They tell us that the Answer. Parliament was coordinate, and not subordinate to the King; that the three Estates of Parliament, whereof the King made one, being fundamentall, admitted not of the difference of Higher or Lower; that the power of the King in Parliament, was not Royall but Politicall: That this Fundamental Law of the Kingdom was not written; for if it were it should be superstrutive, and therefore Mutable and not Fundamental: That the mixture of the three Estates in Government was not Personall but Incorporate.

Those that understand not these Mysticall sentences, ought to be nevertheless content; it being not reasonable that they should understand them better then the Authors themselves. An affected Obscurity amongst Ideots passeth for Knowledge; and ye shall find that the discourses that have least reason in them are most difficult, like Olive stones, which are very hard, because there is nothing in them.

Now is it not requisite to subtilize upon the virtutitie and actuality of the Peoples power, for to inform the Conscience of the Subject, touching the Justice of his Arms against his King; but for that there is indeed need both of Divine and Humane Authority, and such as is easie and to be understood of all. But the observation of Mr. du Moulin is very true, that ordinarily Lying, armes its weakness with thorns, like Lizards, who save themselves by running into bushes.

Above all in a point where the Question of Right is founded upon that of Fact; as this Question now, whether it be lawfull for the English to take up Arms against their Prince, here to go about to satisfie reason and Conscience with political and metaphisical Contemplations is not to purpose, they should (besides Divine Authority which should ever march before) enquire whether the Laws and Constitutions of the Countrey Authorise this War.

The Question being not to dispute which is the best Form of Government, but to preserve the Form to which God hath subjected us, and to observe the Laws of the Kingdome, and after many moral and political discourses (for our Adversaries pay us with no other) those that have any Honesty or Understanding come alwayes to this, that they would shew us by what Law of England it is permitted the Subjects to take up Arms without the Kings permission, and against him. When did the people ever make this Election? Where is it that they have reserved the Liberty to resume the Supreme Authority when they shall please? Is there any Statute made during the Ages that this Monarchie hath continued, that prefers or equals the two Houses to the King, or doth Authorise them to ratifie any thing without him?

him? Where is the Articles of that Capitulation which in some certain cases dissolves the Subjects Oath of Allegiance? Is there any Case in the Law in which it should be lawful for Subjects to take from their King or Supreme Magistrate, his Forts, Navies, and Magazines, and to take into their hands the sole Administration of Justice, and the Militia, to conferre the great Offices of the Crown, to receive the Ambassadors, to treat with Forrain Nations, and to dispose of the Goods and Lives of the Kings Subjects.

To these so important Questions, for the duty and happiness of all the members of an Estate, and the eternal salvation of their Souls and Bodies, to Answer with Platonick considerations, and instead of producing the Laws of the Kingdome, to Philosophy upon the Law of Nature, and form an Appeal from Authentical and known Laws to a word not written, made at pleasure: This is to mock God and men, this is to insult upon the Brutality of the people, and to take a wicked advantage from the wine of Astonishment or Senselessness, which God in his just wrath hath poured forth upon this miserable Nation; for if they did believe there remained any common sense in this blind and mad people, durst they so boldly return so ridiculous an Answer to those that demand where are those Fundamental Lawes written, that now make all other Laws bow to them, namely, that the Fundamental Laws are not written, and that if they were, they should be superstru-

ctive and not fundamental; after this account the Command to Love God withall our heart and our Neighbour as our self, is not fundamental, because it is written, It were to profane Reason to employ it, to refute a reasoning so unreasonable; it must needs be that these people know they have to do with Persons of great Credulity, since they dare give them for a fundamental Law, a Fantasie which they never heard before spoken of, and whereof no Writings nor Histories make mention and this is to Fight against their King, overthrow the State, lose their Goods, hazard their Lives and Consciences: But what should I say? There is no reason but is perswasive when the Conclussions are taken, and there is strength to maintain them.

Christendome which have now their Eyes upon our Broyles, will take notice of the open Confession of the Troubles of this State; That for the War against the King, and for the form of Government which they establish in the Kingdome a Superiour power that aboliseth the Royal, they have no Fundamental Law written: Is not this then marvellously to abuse the Justice of God, and the patience of reasonable Creatures made after his Image, and indued with knowledge; to constrain them to prostitute their Consciences and Lives in a Quarrel for which they openly confess there is not any Law written, and for which there is not the least footing of Approbation, in all that hath been established, or left Authentically thentically written since England hath been a Nation? We have let you see before how they decline the defences of Scripture against the resistance of Sovereigns; behold now they confess there is no fundamental Law written for to justify their Armes, and the superiority of the people above the King, which they would introduce with the sword; and thus they acknowledge, they have no Authority neither Divine nor humane for what they do; as Cardinal Perron In his Oration before the three Estates, Jan. 15. 1605. having maintained the power of the Pope over the Temporal of Kings before the Estates of France, in conclusion affirmed that it was an Article, which was not decided, neither by the Scriptures nor the Ancient Church, so that the Pope and our Mutineers agree together to usurp an Authority upon Kings, without any ground or warrant in the Word of God, and contradicted by all humane Constitutions, that is to say, that both God and man are contrary unto them.

What Examples in the Histories of England the Covenanters make use of to Authorize their Actions.

BUT do we not much wrong them to say that there is nothing makes for them in all the ancient writings and Histories of this

*Observations upon swers of this Kingdome? Do they not alledge the two Parliaments that deposed Edward the second, and Richard the second, yea truly and to their great shame, as the wisest of their party do acknowledge, affirming that those Acts of Parliament against Richard the second, were not properly the Acts of the two Houses, but of Henry the fourth, and his victorious Army, in which they say true, for the Duke of Lancaster, who after caused himself to be called Henry the fourth, having prevailed with the people to rise against their lawful King, assembled a Parliament which he made to do whatsoever he would, and having deposed and imprisoned this poor King, soon after caused him to be put to death; though this Action were as just as it is execrable, yet it would make nothing to the purpose, where the Question is of that which the two Houses may do, separte from the King; for the deposing of King Richard was by another King sitting in Parliament; for untill these last States, the two Houses never thought that they were able to conclude any thing without the Royal consent; and since, the Parliaments held under the House of York, declared Henry the fourth Usurper of the Crown, and therefore condemned the Parliament which had confirmed his usurpation.

The other Example is no better then this,
 the deposing of Edward the second, by the Conspiracy of his wife, and the Favorites of this Queen, who served themselves of a Parliament to Execute this wickedness,
 and

and having deposed the King, and Crowned his Son who was under Age, caused the Father to be most cruelly put to death in prison, and yet the Authority of the young King must be made use of to make the resolution of the Parliament pass into an Act; for without the King the Parliament can no more Act, then a Body without a Head: but when the young King came to Age, he caused the Authors and Complices of his Fathers death to be executed, and caused all the Acts of this Parliament to be broken by another.

And less then these to the purpose is, which they alledge, concerning the accord the Barons extorted from King John, by which this unhappy and imprudent King being reduced to a strait, promised to put himself into the Power of twenty five of his Barons, and submitted himself to divers other dishonourable Conditions; and this accord was not made in Parliament, but in the Field by force of Armes, there being no Parliament then sitting, and therefore was of no force, nor was ever kept.

These Articles of the Barons were much like those the two Houses sent the King to Beverly, Oxford, and New-Castle; the Covenanters imitate these Barons in their affectation of Piety, for they called their General the Marshal of the Lords Army, and of his Holy Church, and these perswaded their Chiefs that they led the Battels of the Lord of Hosts, but these transferred not the Crown to another Prince as the Barons

Barons did, but have taken away both his Crown and Life, having long before declared by writing to their King, that they dealt very favourably with him if they did not depose him, and that if they did they should not exceed the limits of modesty, nor of their duty; this Judgement was pronounced in the House of Commons without contradiction, that the King might fall from his office, that the happiness of the Kingdome did not depend upon him nor the Royall branches of his house, and that he did not deserve to be King of England; the Authors of their opinions are declared in a Declaration of his Majesties, in one point the Barons and Covenanters are very different, for the Lords that remained with the Covenanters were without power, all places of Honour and Trust being taken out of their hands by their Inferiours, and at last their House abolished by the Commons, so that in stead of producing this War of the Barons, the Covenanters should rather have alledged the Seditions and Commorions of Watt Tyler, and Jack Straw, poor Artisans, and followed with people of the same rank; for these persons and the Cause of the Covenanters are far more alike.

Declar. An.
12. 1642.

Behold here with what Authorities the the margins of their Books are stuffed, behold the Examples which the politicians of the times present to the Gentlemen of the Parliament for to teach them what they ought to do; those infamous Actions which were abhorred by the Ages following them are become become the supporters of ours; and Despair, which makes men snatch up any sorts of weapons, forceth our enemies to Justifie their Actions by the examples of Rebels and paricides; 'tis not for nothing then that these Histories are so often alledged, though nothing to the purpose, and it's not without cause that they point them apart for not being able to justifie their Actions, they have declared their intentions, and made the King to see what he should trust to if he fell into their hands: Certainly, if there had not been a design laid to come to that, both to prepare the People and intimidate the King; those Incendaries who by these horrible examples and their maxims of State grounded thereupon, teaching the deposing of Kings, should have been hanged long since with their Books about their necks: For so many men which are studied in the Laws of the Kingdome, and are at the helm of affairs, cannot be ignorant of that which King James of happy and glorious memorie marks in his book of the Right of Kings; that in the time of Edward the third there was an Act of Parliament made which declared all them Traitors who Imagined (it's the word of the Law) or Conspired the death of the King; upon which Act the Judges grounding themselves, have alwayes Judged them for Traitors who dared but to speak of deposing the King, because they beleived that they could not take away the Crown from off the Kings head without taking away his Life. It was heretofore a crime worthy of death to speak,

yea to think evil against the King, and more-over the Word of God which is to be obeyed, forbids us to speak evil of the King, no not in our thought; but now it's the exercise of devout Souls to write Meditations upon the deposing of their King.

CHAP. VII.

Declaring wherein the Legislative Powers of Parliament consists.

HAVING no better Authorities in all the Examples of the Ages past, they establish a New one, which by the unlimited largeness supplies what it wants of length of Time; for when we require to be governed by the Lawes, they Answer us that the Parliament is the Oracle of Lawes; that it is for that great Court to declare what is Law and what is not, to interpret the Lawes, to dispence with them, or to make new ones.

That themselves are the Parliament, excluding all others; and that since they have declared that this War is according to Law, and that such Maximes as they give us are fundamental Lawes of the Kingdome, we must remit our selves to them, and receive for Law what they ordain.

But because strangers may read, who have no knowledge of the Government of England, for to examine this Imperious reason, we are obliged to declare here what we know touching the present affairs.

We have learned to acknowledge the Parliament of England for the Supreme Court of the Kingdome, that can make and unmake Laws, and from whose Judgement there is no appeal: But of this Court the King is the principal part, and it's he that renders it Sovereign, the two Houses in all their Legislative Acts acknowledge him their true and Sole Sovereign, the House of Lords only can evert the Judgment of the Courts of Justice, but not their own without the content of the King and the House of Commons; the House of Commons is not a Judicial Court, having not power to administer an Oath, inflict a Fine, or imprison any, but those of their own House; and these two neither apart nor together cannot make a Law, but when they would enact any thing they both together present a writing to the King in form of a request; if the King approves of them, the Lord Keeper of the Great Seal answers for the King in these French words Le Roy le veult, and then it is made an Act; but if the King refuseth it, he returns answer Le Roy S'avisera, and the business passeth no further; before the consent of the King the proposition of the two Houses contained in the writing is like unto that which the Romans called Rogatio; but when the King grants it, they may then give it the name of Lex, and in effect it is but a request before the pleasure of the King makes it pass into a Law; and was never other before this present Parliament.

Therefore

Therefore the English Lawyers call the King the Life of the Law, for though the King in Parliament cannot make any Law without the Concurrence of the two Houses, yet nevertheless it's his Authority only that gives it the strength and the Name of a Law; and they are so far from having any Legal Authority in their Commands, without the consent of the King, that the customary right gives them not so much as a Name, neither takes any Cognisance of them.

To say then that the Parliament hath declared this War lawfull, and that the Orders of Parliament are Laws, is by an ambiguous term to abuse the ignorance of the people; for by the Parliament they understand sometimes one House, sometimes both; and sometimes the King and both Houses together; it's thus, that men understand them when they speak of the Supreme Court of Parliament, and of Acts of Parliament; for the King was ever accounted the first of the three Estates, without whom the two other had not power to Conclude any thing lawfully, for all their Authority is derived from him, not only for a time, but by a continual Influence, which being interrupted the power of Necessitie ceaseth.

These three together have Power to Interpret the Laws, to Revoke them, and to make others, therein properly lies the Oracle of the Laws. A Judicious Writer of the Royall partie, calls the union of the three Estates, the Sacred Tripes, from whence the Oracles of the Law are pronounced.

When

When any one of these three are seperate from other, the other two flagger and are lame, nor cannot serve for a firm foundation for the safety of the State, and satisfaction of the Subjects Conscience.

But let us yet assume the business higher, you cannot more vex our Enemies than to tell them this truth, that the Monarchie which is at this day, began by Conquest, this is that which by no means they will endure to hear of; but would perswade men that it began by an Election and Covenant, which indeed had never any being but in their own Fancies. If they would be believed for this, they should then produce some Records:
For the bold Conjecturers are less credible then all the Histories which assures us of three Conquests in this Kingdome since the Romanes and Picts; Namely, that of the Saxons, Danes, and Normans.

Moreover those that would abolish this Office and Dignity destroy that of their own Laws, for all the Lands of the Kingdome are held of the K. by right of the Sword, as appears by the Nature of homages and services that the Lords of Fiefes owe to the King when William the Conquerer took possession of the Kingdome, strengthening the Right of his Conquest by the last Will and Testament of Edward the Confessor; he declared himself Master of all the Land, and disposed of it according to his pleasure.

His Son Henry the first eased the People somewhat of the severe and unlimited Goverment of his Father, and confirmed to the English their ancient priviledges, which since after long and bloody Wars, were anew confirmed, and the Quarrel determined by that wise K. Edw. the first, who having as much Valour as Wisdome in condescending to the Rights of his Subjects, knew well how thereby to preserve his own, for after all, the Sovereignty of Kings remained inviolable, and those prerogatives were preserved which were only proper to him who is not subject but to God alone. Such also is the Court of Wards, by which a great many Orphans of the Kingdome are in wardship to the King, and almost all the Lands appertaining to him untill they be of Age. In this thing the Kings of England exceed all other Christian Princes. This being such an essential mark of absolute Sovereignitie that there cannot be a greater. Certainly, if this Monarchie had begun either by Election or Covenant, the Subjects would never have given the King so vast a Power over their Estates and Families.

Amongst the priviledges of the English, these three are the principal. That the King cannot make a Law without the consent of his Estates. That no Law made in Parliament, can be revoked but in Parliament; and that the King can levie no moneys of his Subjects besides his ordinary Revenues, without the Concurrence of the Two Houses, in the intervals of Parliaments; the King according to his Supreme power may make Edicts, but if these Edicts seem Burthen-some to the Subjects, or to impair their Laws

Laws and Priviledges, they humbly present them in the next Parliament, and the King when the Complaint appears just unto him, easeth them; for to make their requests pass for Acts without the pleasure of the King they cannot, neither can the King make new Acts in Parliament without their Consent.

In the mean while, the King makes not them partakers of his Authority, but assembling them in Parliament he renders them capable to limit his Authority, in Cases that appertain to their Cognisance; for there are many Cases wherein they are not to meddle at all, in the point of the Militia; and for fear that they should forget that, even this Power they have to limit the King, comes from the Authority of the King, and he can take it away from them when he pleaseth, for when he breaks up the Parliament, he retires to himself the Authority that he gave them to limit his; and moreover, if they stretch their Priviledges beyond the pleasure of the King, he hath power to dissolve the Parliament, and after the word of the King is passed which dischargeth them and sends them away, they have not power to Sit or Consult a minute.

Whence Bodinus (well versed in the nature of the States of Christendome) concludes the King of England to have Sovereign Authority; The Estates of England, saith he, Bodin. de cannot be assembled nor dissolved, but by the E- Repub. lib. dict of the Prince, no more then in France and I. Cap. 8. Spain; which proves sufficiently that the assemblies have no Power of themselves to Command or forbid a thing; and he laughs at the ignorance of belluga, who affirm the States of Arragon to be above their King, and yet nevertheless confesseth the States cannot assemble nor separate without him; Illud Novum & planè absurdum, That (saith he) is New and altogether a most absurd Doctrine; And therefore it was that which occasioned them who had a design to overthrow Church and State to labour to draw a promise from his Majesty, that the late long Parliament should not be dissolved without the Consent of both Houses, well knowing that without that granted, the K. when he pleased might have overturned their designs; which they having obtained, shewed by their Actions that they thought themselves then privileged to do what they would without his Authority; and thus it is with us at this day.

Yet so it is, that they themselves do confess that this grant did not alter the Nature of the two Houses, and the Gentlemen of the Parliament have often protested that they would not make use of this Act of Grace to the disadvantage of his Majesty; so then if there were no Sovereignty resident in the Two Houses before this Grant, there is no more after, and the pretended fundamentall Laws not written, that parts Sovereignty between the King and his Subjects, yea that transport it wholly to the people, are much to be suspected of falsity since they never appear; but since the promise they obtained of the King (both to his and their great damage,) to perpetuate ate this Parliament as long as they pleased, and since they have begun to exercise the Sovereignty by force of Arms. Thus the new Nobility after they had obtained the Firfs by right or wrong, produce Coats of Arms and Titles which were heretofore unknown.

They maintain this their New Sovereignty by a Maxime of Stephanus, Junius, Brutus, Rex est singulis Major & universis Minor, that is to say, (as they expound it,) That the King is the Sovereign of Particulars, but the Representative body of the State is greater then he, and have Sovereignty over him; and all their Writers (and amongst others the Observator on the Kings Answers,) attribute Majestie to the Commonaltie, and not to the King or Supreme; if this be true, it's very strange how this representative Body of the State, the Parliament have left it so long time to the Kings, the Court of Wards, and many other Rights of Sovereignty, which they have enjoyed without Contradiction, untill that present Parliament.

This vile Maxime then being destitute of all proofes from the Laws and Customes of the State, ought to be despised; but moreover it is also void of all reason, for if the English be subject to their King in Retaile, are they not in Gross, if in pieces not in the whole; being born Subjects, have they power to give the Sovereignty to their Deputies or Parliament men, and make them Chief? that is to say, can they give them that which they have not? And seeing also that they cannot assemble in Parliament without the King or Supreme Magistrates Writ; this Writ of the Kings doth it render them forth with Sovereigns above the King? The style of the Writ calls them, ad Consultandum de quibusdam arduis, to Consult with him, about some difficult affairs, and not to master him, and to dispose of his Authority.

And since they call this great Court, the body Representative of Subjects, they must needs then be Subjects, otherwise they should not represent them who sent them, and that which the King accords to, should be granted to Sovereigns, but his Subjects should receive no benefit thereby: He who will well examine this proposition; That the Sovereignty over the Sovereign rests in the Representative body of the Subjects shall find it full of Contradictions, and to destroy it self.

They cannot bring any probable reason saith Bodin. D<sup>2</sup> Bodin.) that the Subjects ought to Command their Prince, and that the Assembly of Estates ought to have any Power, unless when the Prince is under Age, or distracted, or Captive, then the Estates may depute him a Regent or Lieutenant. Otherwise, if Princes were subject to the Laws of the States, and Commands of the people, their Power were nothing, and the Title of a King would be a Name without the thing; moreover, under such a Prince the Commonwealth should not be Governed by the people, but by some few persons equal in their Suffrages, who would make Laws and Edicts, not by the Au-

Authority of the Prince, but by their own ; who for all that come and present him humbly with requests, every one apart by himself, and all in a body making shew of Faithfulness and Obedience ; these things are as ridiculous as can be imagined : thus saith Bodin. Behold here the Form of State of our Covenanters in their beginning, so drawn to the life by this learned Person, that one would say, he took the very Copy from them : In effect, when ( under a Monarchy ) a Faction in an Assembly of States shall take upon them the Sovereignty, the State change not into an Aristocracy nor Democracy, but into a pure Obligarchy, which is the worst of all Forms of State, and but the Corruption of others. The Royal Power being once usurped, 'tis not then the greatest, nor the best, nor the most, who govern the Affairs ; but some few unquiet and ambitious persons, who love contention, and know how to fish in troubled waters ; and as these men deceive the King with a false Idea of Sovereignty, so they deceive their companions, perswading them that they have part in their Authority, because they have voyces in the House ; for in such Assemblies where the choise of persons is more by hap then Judgment, the Suffrage is to all, but the Power is in a few.

The same Author, numbring the Sovereign and absolute Monarchies of Christendome, places England and Scotland amongst them ; and saith, That without all Question, their Kings have all the rights of Majestie, and that it is not lawful for their Subjects neither apart nor in a Body, to attempt any thing against the Life, Reputation or Goods of their Sovereign, be it either by wayes of Force or Justice: al-

De Repub. though he were guilty of all the Crimes a man
lib. 2. cap. 5. could imagine in a Tyrant.

For the Subjection that the Parliament owe to their King, we can have no better witness then the Parliament it self; for that disloyal Maxime, that the body of the State is above the King, is contradicted by the ordinary style of their papers presented to the King by this Body: The Two Houses most humbly beseech their Sovereign Lord the King, and they qualifie themselves, the most humble and Loyal Subjects of his Majestie, 'tis the Presentative Body of the Kingdome who speaks, and nothing by way of Complement but Duty: This preface hath an excellent Grace in the beginning of a Declaration of the Two Houses to their King, wherein they tell him, that they deal favourably with him, if they do not depose him, and that they may do it without exceeding the li-
Revel. 9. mits of their Duty and Modesty. This discourse is like the Locusts of the Bottomless pit, which had the Faces of men, but the Tailles of Scorpions; and therefore to avoid this disproportion, in their Articles presented to the King at New-Castle, they left out the Qualification of Subjects.

The ordinary preface of Statutes do lively express the Nature of the three Estates; The King by the Advice and Consent of the Prelates, Earls and Barons, and at the instance and request of the Commonalty hath ordained &c.

For

For it's the King alone properly that ordains the Peers; as Councillors advice and Consent, the Commons as Supliants require and sollicite. The Parliament held in the twenty fourth year of Henry the eighth, speaks thus; By divers ancient and Authentical Histories, and Chronicles, it is manifestly declared that this Kingdome of England is an Empire, and for such hath been known in the world, governed by one Sovereign Head, having the dignity and royal greatness of the Imperial Crown to which there is a Body politick joyned, composed of all sorts and degrees of people, as well Spiritual as Temporal, who are bound next to God, to render unto him Natural Obedience. If the Body politick be naturally subjected to him as to its Head, it's contrary to Nature, that it should be subjected to the Body politick; and his Maxime, Rex est universis minor, is condemned as false by the Parliament; they knew not in those dayes what it was to make the Body of the State march with its head downward and feet upward, but they were careful to maintain the Head in that eminent place where God had set it; and hither also tend the words following, That the Chief Sovereign is instituted and furnished by the goodness, and permission of Almighty God, with full and entire Power, Preheminence, Authority, Prerogative and Jurisdiction, to execute Justice, and put a final determination in all Cases to all sorts of his Subjects within this Kingdome; and that many Lawes and Ordinances, had been made in preceeding Parliaments for the full and sure conserving serving of the prerogative and preheminance of this Crown. These good Subjects, could not find words enough, nor consult of means sufficient according to their mind to defend the Authority of their King; esteeming (and well they might) that the happiness and liberty of the Subjects lay in the inviolable power of their Sovereign, that the greatness of the State consisted in that of the Prince, and that there is no other way to crown the Body, but to place the Crown upon the Head.

This style is very far from that of the nineteen Propositions presented to the King by the Two Houses in the beginning of the War; which required that all matters of State should be treated of only in Parliament, or if the King would treat of any Affairs in his Councell, this Council should be limited to a certain number, and the old Councillers cashiered, unless such whom it pleased the Two Houses to retain, and that none hereafter should be admitted without their approbation; that the King should have no power in the Education and Marriage of his Children without their advice; that all great officers of the Crown, and the principal Judges, should alwayes be chosen by the approbation of the Two Houses, or by a Council authorized by them; the same also in Governours of Places and in the Creation of Peers, which hath since been denied to the King in effect. And as for the Militia, they would have the King wholly put it into their hands, that is to say, he should take his sword from his side and give it them, which he could not do without giving them the Crown, for the Crown and the Royal Sword are both of one piece; so also for the point of Religion, these propositions take from him all Authority and liberty of judgment, yea, even the liberty of Conscience; for they require that his Majestie consent to such a Reformation as the Two Houses should conclude upon, without telling him what this Reformation is. Let all the world here judge if these men speak like Subjects; they had reason to present these Articles with their swords in their hands, but the King had more reason to draw his to return them an Answer.

All these propositions are founded upon one only proposition, which passeth amongst them for a Fundamental Law. That the King is bound to Grant to the People all their Demands: but this is a Fundamental in the Air, and made void by the practise of all Ages since England was a Monarchy, and by that Authentical Judgment of the States assembled under Hen. the fifth; That it belongs <sup>2 Hen. 5.</sup> to the Supremacy of the King. to grant or refuse according to his pleasure, the Demands that are made to him in Parliament: And in stead of the House of Commons, being as it is now the Sovereign Court, a thing never heard of untill this present Age; The House supplica- <sup>Ola. magna</sup> ted Henry the fourth, not to employ himself in <sup>charta Di-</sup> any Judgment in Parliament, but in such Cases as <sup>ar. Hen. 4.</sup> as in effect appertained to him, because it belonged to the King alone to judge, except in Cases specified by the Statutes. The

- 3 Edw. 3. The same House under Edward the third, acknowledged that it did not belong to them to take Cognisance of such matters, as the keeping of the Seas, or the Marshes of the Kingdome: yea, even during the sitting of Parliaments, the Kings have alwayes disposed of the Militia, and Admiralty of the Forts and Garrisons, the Two Houses never interposing or pretending any right thereunto; they declared ingeniously
- 7 Edw. 1. to Edw. the first, that to him belonged to make expresse Command against all Force of Arms, and to that end they were bound to assist him, as their Sovereign Lord.

They declared also to King Henry the seventh, that every Subject by the duty of his Subjection, was bound to serve and assist his Prince and Sovereign Lord upon all occasions: by which they signified, that it was not for them to meddle with the Militia; but that their duty as Subjects bound them to be aiding and assisting to him.

The Learned in the Laws tell us, that to raise Troops of Horse or Foot without Commission of the King, or to lend Aid is esteemed and called by the Law of England, to levy war against the King our Sovereign Lord his Crown and dignity: In this point all that is done without him, is done against him, and this is conformable to the general Right of all Nations; as for the Royal Estate (saith Bodin.) I beleeve there is no person that doubts that all the Power both of making Peace and War belongs to the King, since none dare in the least manner do any thing in this matter without the Command.

Command of the King, unless he will forfeit and endanger his Head. If the Two Houses were priviledged to the contrary by any Statute, we should have heard them speak it, but for what they have done, we see no other Authority then their practice.

Therefore none ought to wonder if this their New practice hath less Authority with persons of a sound judgment, then these practises of all ages past; and if we cannot perswade our selves that without the Authority of the K. they cannot abolish those of Parliaments Authorized by the King; Let them not then make such a loud noise with the Authority of Parliament; 'tis in Obedience to that Supreme Court of Parliament that we so earnestly strive to preserve the Princes Rights, those Acts of Parliament are in full force which have provided with great care to defend the Royal Perogatives, judging aright that the Sovereignty is the pillar of the publick safety, and that it cannot be divided without being weakned, and without shaking the State that rests upon it; but we leave the reasons of the form of this Estate to them who formed it, contenting our selves to obey the Laws, until the same Authority that made them alters and changes them.

This Authority being that of the Prince sitting in Parliament, we hold not our selves bound by that which passeth in any House or Councel without him and against him, accounting that where the Princes Authority shines not their power is eclips'd; above all since the Houses at Westminster were reduced to the fourth part of their Number, and the lesser part (the Major part being frightened away) and filled their vacant places with persons of their own judgment, without the Kings Authority; if the Houses had ever any Power without him, it was like the light of the Moon without the Sun, Ex-Truncum & malignum Lumen, as the Astrologers call it, it was a little light which did nought but hurt.

Our great Lawyer Fortescue speaks well, that as a Natural body when the Head is cut off, is not called a Body, but a Trunk; so in the Body Politick, the Comonalty without a Head cannot any way incorporate or make a Body.

CHAP. VIII.

How the Covenanters will be Judges in their own Cause.

BUT was there ever any thing more unreasonable then this proceeding? They would that the judgment of the Lesser part of the Two Houses without the King, and against all former Parliaments, should be received, yea, in their own Quarrel; and that in the Controversie whether the King hath Authority above this Assembly, or it above him, this Assembly will be judge, 'tis for them (they tell us) to declare what is Law,

Law, and to make the Law : Now that Assembly declares, that their Authority is above the King, that their Armes are just, and the King's unjust ; and that the Representative Body of the State cannot erre in Law, and that it's your duty to stand to their Judgment.

These people would be ashamed to confess where they have learned thus to reason; Is it not of him who said, Dic Ecclesia, hoc est tibi ipsi ; Tell it to the Church, that is to say, to thy self, and truly to confute them, we will do them the shame, to employ the same words, we make use of against him, changing onely the persons.

In the present Quarrel, one of the Judge of Controversies is, whether the Two Houses at Westm. without the King, are the Sovereign ie. cap. 5. p. 103. Judges in point of Law. In this Controversie should the Two Houses be Judges, they should then be Judges in their own Cause, and should be assured to gain their process. Item, if it be disputed whether they can erre in this Controversie also, they would judge they could not erre? Should they be infallible Judges of their infallibility? Who beholds not in this an Evident Contradiction? That it must be, that he that disputes whether the Two Houses can erre, must address himself to the Two Houses, as to Judges that cannot erre, to judge this Question; so likewise in the Question, whether the Authority of the Two Houses, be above the King, it's certain that the Two Houses cannot be Judges, since by this same Question

tion their Authority to Judge is called into doubt, the one pretends, that the difference hath been decided and Judged by the Authority of a Sovereign and infallible Judge; it's certain that hereby he renders the wound Incurable, the Quarrel eternal, and beyond all Terms of Reconciliation.

It matters not to say, that between two parties that pretend to the Sovereignty, there can be no Judge, but that the strongest must carry it; for if the two parties desire peace, they may choose Arbiters. The King or Supreme being the Natural Sovereign of his Enemies, and he who gives vigor to the Laws, hath desired notwithstanding, that the difference should be determined by the Lawes, he pretends not to Infallibility: He hath also often chosen his Neighbours for Arbiters, and hath fully satisfied them by reasonable offers, and such as are worthy of him; witness the Report that the extraordinary Ambassadors of the States Generals made to their Lords, for which the Parliament of London declared their great discontent in writings: The King being to render account of his Actions to none but God alone, submitted himself notwithstanding to Reason and Piety, remitting himself wholly to the Ancient Lawes and Constitutions of his Kingdome.

He hath often protested and oft-times published, and in this difference taken all Christendome for Arbiters; but what? in the Question whether his Subjects can make a Law against him, and whither they have right right to make warre on him, and would also that he should remit himself to their Ordinances, yea even those which they have made without him, against his will, and against himself; and that he should acknowledge them for supream Judges in their own cause, without other Arbitres then their will: Now they have had their wils wholly, and have been Judges and parties both together, a priviledge that belongs to God alone, to whose supream Court we appeal.

CHAP. IX.

That the most Noble and best part of the Parliament retired to the King, being driven away by the worse.

THAT which doth strongly perswade us to believe, that the Priviledges of Parliament, which they would extend even in infinitum, have an ill foundation, is because we have seen them opposed by the better part of the Parliament both in Quality and Dignity; For besides the King, an hundred seventy five of the House of Commons, and the best qualified, withdrew themselves from amongst them, and of the Lords eighty three, so that scarcely the third part remained at Westminster. Almost all the Gentry wholly followed the King; And when we consider the Persons, the Condition and Revenues of those that withdrew themselves, we cannot see that they had any need to fish in troubled waters, or to warm themselves at the Great Fire that began to Flame, as those had that remained. Without doubt that great Body of Lords and Gentlemen of the Kingdom loved their Liberty, and would never have assisted the King to have obtained an unlimited power, break their Priviledges, and impose a perpetual yoke of slavery upon them and their posterity.

When need was, these members of Parliament assembled themselves, and the King deferred to their Councils as much as their Priviledges required: Whereupon those of the Parliament of London were extraordinarily vexed, maintaining that the Name and Power of Parliament, was from that time fastened to the place where they sat, which is a point that we will not dispute, how strange soever it be; But we would have them remember, that they have had their sitting in other places, and have not for all that thought they had left their Authority at Westminster; and we dare answer for them, that if the Lords and Commons which held with the King, had driven them away, and taken their place, they would soon have changed their Opinion.

Besides this strong consideration of Numbers and Persons, all those who know that the King is the Fountain of Authority, and that without him there is no more Lawfull Power, then day without the sun, would never make question which were the true Parliament, that which acted with him, or that which rose up and fought against him. But alas since, Force and Necessity hath constrained many poor
Lords

Lords to return, and bow to their unjust Power.

It would be too long to relate all the reasons that moved in the beginning, so many persons of Honour to withdraw themselves from London, in the general they loved their Religion, their King and Country, and could not consent to the general disorder of Church and State, nor hinder it in gainfaying.

For a sample of their proceedings, which they used to drive them away, we will only commend to the Judicious Reader the Petition of the baser sort of people of London, presented to the House of Commons, and by that House to the House of Lords, To ex- Anno hort the Lords to sit no longer apart from the 1641.
House of Commons, but to make one whole and entire Body together, and to joyn with them, and that they would agree to an equality in the State, to procure an equality in the Church, and for a while to forsake their power of Lords to subdue the pride of the King; adding withall, That if they gave not a speedy remedy to the obstructions which retarded the happy progresse of the great pains they took, they should be forced to have recourse to the Remedy they had in their hands, and to destroy the disturbers of their peace, requiring the House that they would publickly declare to them who they were.

Judge ye in what Commonwealth these people lived, who durst present such a Petition, and if there appeared not a sworn hatred against all Greatnesse and Superiority, and a design formed to change this Noble and Antient Monarchy into a Commonwealth, like that of Munster. Oh what impudence? to dare to sollicite the House of Lords at one blow to lose both their Rights and Honours, to consent to an Equality in the State, which was to debase them, and even to put them in their shirts, and oblige them to depose the King, and to render him like to the meanest of the people: For observe, they would have an equality in the State, like unto that of the Church, where all Ministers are Companions. The Royal Dignity they call pride, and would seduce the Nobility, which is the Kings right hand, to ruine the Head from whence their Honour takes life and motion; and this urged with menaces to destroy them, and bravado's that the lives of the Great ones were in their hands: Behold here that of the Prophet Isaiah fulfilled, The base shall behave himself proudly against the Honourable.
G 2 that

Isa. 3. 5.

These Petitioners in the Title of their Petition qualified themselves, The poorest of the people, and such indeed they were; so little in their condition, that a great person offended would have scorned to have taken notice of them, and yet so strong in their number, that there was neither greatnesse nor power that could resist them; in this double regard they were chosen, to speak aloud the intentions that their Leaders would, but durst not otherwise make known, and that they might bear the blame without danger, as proceeding from the insolence and ignorance of a brutish and ill bread people.

Notwithstanding the charity of the House of Commons discharged this poor people of the the blame, and took it upon themselves. For these Gentlemen, did they not in a body themselves present this so unworthy a Petition to the House of Lords, witnessing thereby, that the Petition, and the seditious souls of those people which clamoured at their doors, was a work of their own. Oh how will they palliate over this vile action? All the water in the Sea cannot wash away their shame, to favour so villanous a Petition, instead of making the bearers feel the effects of their just indignation. This base multitude might have been frightened and dispersed by an angry look or word of this great and Noble House of Lords, but this Rascality had friends in the Parliament, who emboldened them to rise, thereby to make use of their assistance: For the same day (the seditious Rabble remaining there to serve them who sent for them) the Ordinance to take the Militia from the King, which had twice been cast out of the Lords House, was again presented to them the third time by the House of Commons, with Threatnings, giving them openly to understand, That if the House of Lords did not joyn with the Commons in point of the Militia, those amongst them that were of the Commons opinion, should do wisely to make them publicly known, that so they might distinguish their Friends from their Foes. This being seconded by the great cries of the mutinous people about the House of Parliament, the most part of the Lords arose and left their places, and amongst the Lords who remained, those who were for the Militia, for fear or otherwise, carried it by some voices.

This story is related in the Kings declaration of Aug. 12. Anno 1642.

Soon after many of both Houses withdrew themselves without ever returning; it was time to part company, when they could not Vote without hazzarding their lives or consciences: For the Names of the Lords and Commons which pleased not the Zealous party, were posted up to make them flee, or to be torn a pieces by the intraged multitude.

And thus the small party of the two Houses drave away the greater, as a few Hornets which dispeoples the whole Hive; being assisted herein by the insolent, hypocritical and meaner sort of people, which were at their beck, through the industry of some seditious Preachers of the populous Parishes of London, where the Brownists and Anabaptists abounded.

By the same instruments the Lords had been before constrained to passe the Ordinance for taking away the Bishops Votes in Parliament.

By the same instruments also the King was driven from his House and chief City, when the Factious affrighted a peaceable and disarmed King, arming the people, and maning out Vessels of Warre on the Thames, besieging the Royal Palace, under colour of being a Guard to the six Members, whom the King had accused of High Treason, to conduct them to Westminster in spite of him; but the King some hours before retired himself to save his life, and returned not after.

In requitall of the many good services of the people, their Masters at Westminster permitted them all kind of Liberty, and indeed they taught the people that leud licentiousnesse, who before were kept in obedience by an excellent Government, and could hardly be brought to become so vile and insolent: but there is nothing but in time one may learn, by exhortations and examples; and it appeared by their actions, how well they had profitted in this Art, for when the House of Lords would have reprov'd them, the House of Commons were offended with the Lords, and made this open profession to them, That they should not discourage their friends, and that they had need of their service. And thus these Masters and the factious people, granted one another mutual liberty, and they forgave the people their passed Insolencies, on condition they would commit new ones.

But when the honest and most understanding of the City came in a good number to Petition the two Houses to hearken to peace, and satisfie the King, they were severely rebuked as Seditious, and these Gentlemen let them know that they loved no noise but of their own making. Behold here the waies whereby the Parliament of London obtained their Absolute power; behold the Foundations they laid for a most holy Reformation.

Posterity will be ashamed of the Actions of their Fathers, all Forreign Nations will abhorre these proceedings, remorse and sorrow may in the end enter into the hearts of the Londoners, when they shall behold themselves the sole object of publique Execrations and Curses. Those of Gaunt and Paris have only reason to pardon them, when they shall remember their Barracado's, and the estate of the Nobles during the holy League.

CHAP. X.

A Parrallel of the Covenant with the Holy League of France, under Henry the 3<sup>d</sup>.

VV Ho so shall compare the hoy League of France with the English Covenant, shall find that they are sisters, daughters of the same Father, and that the younger is to the life after the Image of the elder ; in both you shall find an Oath of mutual assistance to extirpate Heresie, without the Authority of the King, and which at last is turned against the King himself : A Jealousie without ground of the Religion of their Sovereign, and a Warre of Religion against a King of the same Religion, which they would make the world believe was a Heretique. A League with strangers, and Armies raised in the Kingdom against their Natural Prince, who gave them no other occasion of the Warre but his too much Gentlenesse. A King submitting himself to reason, offering himself to Remedy all the Grievances of his Subjects, and a people refusing to admit him to bring a Remedy, Remedy, and resolved to give order without him, the King driven from his chiefe City, which he had honoured by his ordinary presence. The fire of civil warre blown about by seditious preachers. The superstitious people tributary to the Ambition of some particulars, weak conscience instructed to cut the throate of their King, for the love of God, and to gain Paradise; fastings frequent, Devotions doubled, Prophetickall inspirations, Examples of Angelicall holinesse, and all this to perswade the superstitious people, that God favoured their seditions as his cause, and that their leaders took Councell of none but the Holy Ghost, and had no other aim but the setting up of the Kingdome of Jesus Christ, writers under pay to writ scandalous libells against their King, the people sed with lies to drain money out of their purses, one while amazing them with feares where there was none, another while flatteting them with false hopes and with forged news: A Parliament in the principall City, but in it a small number, who wanting the Royall assistance, support themselves, by granting liberty, to an inveagled people, and by power of Rich and foolish Citizens. Nobility scorned, Artificers and Banquerouts, bearing the sway, all order Divine and Humane overturned, the antient laws and customes broken, and new fundamentall laws never heard of before in their places. In brief, it appears at this day, that the devil marches abroad, and walks in the same paths he did about fifty years since.

CHAP. XI.

The Doctrine of the English Covenanters parallel'd with the Doctrine of the Jesuits.

SINCE the league of France and the English Covenant were both made upon pretence of Religion, it's not unworthy our paines to consider the conformity of the Doctrines, they employd to maintain both the one and the other, and how the Jesuits Maximes were the chief support of the Covenant.

Bellar.de Concil.
lib. 2.
Cap. 19.

Both in the league and Covenant, the people were encouraged to take up Armes against their King, by this Opinion of Cardinal Bellarmines, who teacheth, that in the Kingdomes of men, the power of the King comes from the people, because it's the people that makes the King, and that the people do never so transference their power over to the King, but they retain it in habitu, and so that in certain cases they may in effect reassume it again, which was also the Judgment of Navarrus whom the Cardinall highly extols.

And thus also the Author of the observations upon the Kings Declarations, who is the Master of the sentences with the Covenanters teacheth us. That originally the power is in the people, who are the Fountain and efficient cause, cause , and that the Authority is not in the Prince , but secondarily and derivatively : All these State Philosophers are full of School Termes , but little reason ; and he adds , That this Authority founded by the people , cannot be dissolved but by that power which gave it constitution. Which is as much as to say , that the people may take away the Kings power , and authority when they please.

Another of the sect , but more antient tells us ; That Princes and Governours have their authority from the people ; who when they find it convenient , may resume and take it from them again , as every man may revoke when he please his own procuration , or warrant , but this reason shall by and by be examined and refuted.

The Cardinal explaines himself more clearly in that which before he had written in Covert Termes. Saying , that a King such as he there describes, may, yea ought, by the consent of all, to be deprived of his Authority : and Goodman is of his opinion, that evil Princes ought to be deposed , and that this alone belongs to the inferiour Magistrates to put in execution.

We learn from Doctor Charron that the French Leaguers eluded the strength of St Pauls texts, which forbids the opposing of Sovereigns, in saying , that the commands had regard and respect onely to the State of the Christians of those times , because they were not then strong enough to make resistance. I have before shew'd how Bellarmine , Buchanan, and the Champions of Covenant , venant, make use of the same reason and exposition.

Emanuel Sa in voce Tyrannus. Knox to Engl. and Scot. 78.

But to clear the way, and make it smoth to come to deposing of Sovereign Princes : These two parties are wont to absolve their subjects from their Oaths of Allegiance, Emanuel Sa, the Jesuite saith ; That the people may depose their Prince, even after they have sworne perpetuall obedience to him. And Mr. Knox saith that if Princes prove Tyrants against God and his truth, their subjects are free from their Oaths of Allegiance, &c.

To the excommunication and deposing of the Prince ordinarily, there followes execution according to the Authentrick Bull : That it's not Homicide to kill an excommunicated person. The French league produced two examples in the persons of their Kings ; and this accords with the Doctrine of Buchanan, That Ministers may excommunicate Princes, and that a King after he is cast into Hell by excommunication, is unworthy to live, or to enjoy life upon earth : But observe in passing, the Reformed Churches, do not teach that the Excommunicatio Major do cast any person into Hell, but onely excludes them from the outward communion of the visible Church, and in this, as in other things, Buchanan hath shew'd himself to be lesse skilled in Divinity, then in Poetry.

Hyp aras. pishes. lib. 3. Cap. 10.

The best excuse which can be alledg'd in his defence is that which Mr. Du Moulin lends him, which may also serve for Mr. Knox, That if he hath written any thing which passeth moderation, we must not attribute it to his Religion but

but nature; for it's most certain both these were hot headed men, and had a great Antipathy against Monarchy.

As for the Doctrine of King killing, which is a Familiar Doctrine amongst the Jesuits, and is oft their shame and reproach; they, to render us as odious as themselves, and by way of exchange, alledge and quote in their writings, the passages of Buchanan, Knox, and Goodman, who together with them teach the same Doctrine. That cunning Jesuite, Petra Sancta is very curious in searching into their writings, whom that excellent person Mr. Rivet answers, and tels him, that none amongst us approve or allow those wicked Maximes, and imputes the cause to their supposed persecution, which had exasperated their spirits, and to the hot heads of the Nations of this Island.

vapulans,

After this so wise and charitable, a reprehension, coming from a person of such eminency, men of learning amongst them, ought at least to have learned modesty, since they refused to learn obedience of their Parliaments, which condemned these Doctrines of Knox, and Buchanan by their publick Acts, or by the determinations of their principall Divines who have learnedly refused them; And also by considering what great paines Mr. Blondil, Mr. Valade, and other judicious and learned men of Forraign Churches, have taken to wash off the filth of their Doctrines and behaviours, which have exceedingly scandalized the Evangelicall profession; after so many Iterated saving advertisements, risements, one would have thought they should have preserved themselves from falling into the same offences, and from giving new occasions of rejoycing to their enemies, and of shame to their brethren; but behold of late worse then ever, their hot heads have produced such new effects of violence, as gives a challenge of defiance to the very Jesuits themselves.

Syons plea The Author of Sions Plea; animates the people to warre and to pull down the Bishops, speaking thus, Smite neither small, nor great, but the troublers of Israel, wound that Hazaell in the fifth Rib: Yea if your father and mother stand in your way to prevent you, dispatch them suddenly, pull down the ensigne of the Dragon, set up the standard of Jesus Christ. What? If the father of the State stand in your way, now when ye are busie in this holy cause, must he be dispatched? no doubt but they would tread upon him to make way, and would serve the Son, as they had done the Father; Tis a point resolved on by the same Author, they must strike the Basilique vain, none but that can heale the pluresie of State, which is as much as to say in good English, that they must cut the throat of the King for the publique good. This Author were a good Scholler of the two Jesuits, Guignard and Scribanius, had he not too grossely borrowed their Termes, for (say they) France was sick, and they must cut the Basilique vain to heale her; and Scribanius, that they committed a great error on S<sup>t</sup> Bartholomews even that they cut not that vain. That is, that those of the Guifian faction spared the lives of the King of Navarre and the Prince of Condie.

Oh rare Flowers of Diabolical Rhetorick, Oh the shame of Christian Religion, is this the simplicity and meeknesse of the Gospel? is this the way to guide conscience into the way of peace, and to set up the Kingdome of Jesus Christ, or Christ on his Throne? If S<sup>t</sup> Paul were alive, doubtlesse these men would even maintain to his face, that he understood not the nature of the spirituall Kingdome, when he said, That the Rom. Kingdome of God is righteousnesse, peace and 14.7. joy in the Holy Ghost, and when he read this lesson to the Christians, Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to which peace yea are called in one body.

They would have taught him that the Kingdome of Jesus Christ ought to be set up by the murdering of Kings, the destruction of the people, and the overthrow of States, and would have sent him to their Catechise to be instructed, That the Parliament Souldiers at the present ought not to consider us as their fellow Cittizens or their parents, or their companions in Religion, but as enemies of God, upholders of Anti-Christ, and therefore their eye should not pittie us, nor their sword spare us.

These are the words of that abominable Catechism published by authority, for the use of the Covenanters Army, oh behold the principles of faith, wherewith these dull souls are instructed, behold the bread of life wherewith their Divines feed the consciences of

The Souldiers Catechism composed for the Parliament Army by Robert Ram Minister, published by authority, pag. 14. 15. of the seventh Edition.

Jer. 23. 4. the poor people, I have seen in the Prophets of Hierusalem an horrible thing, they commit Adultery and walk in lies, they strengthen also the hands of evil doers; Israel, the daies of thy visitation are come, thy Prophets are fools, and thy men of Revelations are mad.

To these prodigious Doctrines we will joine that Aphorism in the book entituled, Altare Damascenum, That all Kings have a naturall hatred against Christ: If ye would believe this man, every one that loves Christ, must bear an irreconcilable hatred to all Kings; was there ever a more seditious and execrable Maxime: after such a Doctrine pronounced by an Author of such account, should we ask who hath put weapons into the hands of this superstitious people against their Sovereign, for these poor miserable people, hate the King for the love of God, ye many account him an enemy of Jesus Christ, even because he is a King.

That we may the better discover by what spirit this man is led, observe how he deals with his naturall Prince, he calls King James of most happy and glorious memory, Infestissimus Ecclesie Hostes, the most mortall enemy of the Church, without doubt those who read this, will question what Religion this man is of, who so quallifies the incomparable defender of the faith, who hath so vigorously and sincerely maintained the truth, that if there were a Christian in the world, who knew not that great Prince, neither by his admirable writings, nor by the Renown of his piety and wisdom, and should hear him him call'd the most spitefull and mortall enemy of the Church, he might well imagine that King James had turned Turk, and changed the Churches of his Kingdome into Mosques, and sold his Christian subjects for slaves to the Moores.

It were to do wrong to the Testimony that himself hath given by the immortal monuments of his Religious wisdom, & by his truly Christian and fatherly Government, to undertake here to defend him against so unequall an adversary, wherein the injuries spoken of this excellent King, turns to the ruine and perdition of him that spake them, like unto the bitings of the weasel, who consumes his teeth by gnawing of Steel.

Certainly when the Divines of France, defend in their writings, the confession of faith of his Majesty, against the Doctors of the contrary Religion, they account not that King, a most mortall enemy of the Church, that most holy Confession confirmed by the practice of that great Prince, will serve as a bright shining light in the Church in after Ages, and cover the memory of them who injured and reproached him with perpetuall shame.

But for the present, these rare Adages which curse the best of Kings, and Royalty in General, are gather'd as choice and Golden sentences. Witnesse this other, which comes from the authority of his Companion, as great a liar as himself, who hath this passage, He erres not much who saith, that there is in all Kings a mortall hatred against the Gospel, they Vindicia Philadel.
H will

will not suffer willingly the King of Kings to Govern in their Kingdomes , yet God hath some amongst the Kings who pertain to him , but very few , it may be one in an hundred. But since he is upon the number , instead of counting a hundred Kings one after another , let him account onely a hundred years without going out of England , and we intreat this good man to consider what Kings have Raigned over this Kingdome within this hundred years , and let him in good earnest tell us which of them he would leave to God , and which he would give to the devil ; let them consider the piety of him , whom God hath made a Saint , and they a Martyr , let them find if they can in all his Kingdome , a man more just and meek , more temperate and Religious , and let envy and Rebellion , who finding nothing to bite at , in the life of this Monarch , burst asunder at his feet , and hide themselves in their own confusion.

Let us say the same to the observator upon his Majesties Declarations , who speaking of all Kings now rainging , but with a particular Application to his Sovereign faith , That to be the delight of mankind ( as Titus Vespasian ) is now a sordid thing amongst Princes , but to be Tormentors and executioners of the publique , to plot and contrive the ruine of their subjects , which they ought naturally to protect , is now accounted a work worthy of Caesar. If Reviling and speaking reprochfull words against the King were Blasphemy , according to the stile of the civil Lawes of Israel , then this impious person is a Blasphemer in the highest degree against the sacred Majesty of Kings, and moreover exceeding ridiculous as well as wicked, to appropriate this Description to his King, whose known piety, Justice and Clemency deserved rather the title of the delights of mankind, then that Emperour upon whom the love of the people conferred it; the like I may speak of the Kings of France within these fifty years, all the Lists of the French Kings furnisheth not such excellent Princes; wherefore Aphorismes of Rebellion, could never have been pronounced in an age more proper to give the Authors the lye.

The Lord rebuke these black souls, who curse God in the person of his Anointed, their sentence is written, and their qualities, painted out to the life by St. Peter, who despise Dominions, presumptuous, self-willed, they are not affraid to speak evil of dignities, whereas Angels which are greater in power, bring not rayling accusations against them before the Lord, but these are naturall brut beasts, made to be taken and destroy'd, speak evil of things which they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption.

I might heap up many more passages of our enemies, which teach murder, Rebellion, and hatred of Kings, in which they seem to dispute with the very Jesuits themselves, this description of their devotion. A seditious piety, a factious Religion which would be Judge of the consciences of Princes, who abhorre their Religion, because they hate their Government, who make good subjects, and good Christians to be things incompatible.

Whosoever would weary his patience, and behold how ingenious the Covenanters have been even to exercise the patience of God, and insult over the persons and authority of Kings, let them read their Sermons which were daily printed by authority, after they had preached them before the House of Commons, wherein the filthy Torrent of seditious Eloquence, and the Fantastickness of a Bastard Devotion were imploy'd to teare a pieces the King, to disfigure him in odious colours, and stir up the people to all cruell and bloody courses against him, out of which books we might collect thousands of Moderne authorities in favour of the wickedness of these times, which passed from them as Doctrines of Religion; but we esteem our selves worthy of a better employment, then to be poring on Carrion, and stirring in sincks and puddles: that which we have cited out of known authors shall suffice to let the world see with whom we have to do, and that we are cal'd to the Condition of St. Paul, to fight with beasts.

CHAP. XII.

How the Covenanters wrong the Reformed Churches, in inviting them to joyn with them; with an Answer for the Churches of France.

AS 'tis the vice of those who are stricken with the Leprosie, to endeavour to infect others, so the Covenanters, like to them, labour by all means possible to spread abroad the poyson of their impiety; Those who have preached and published their most infamous Doctrines, which renders Christianity hateful both to Turks and Pagans; were so bold as to addresse their publique Declarations to the Reformed Churches of France, the Low Countries and Switzerland, as if they made profession of the same Doctrines; they had the impudence to invite these so pure Churches, to have society with them, and to pray them to esteem the Cause of the Covenant, that of all the Churches. In this the Assembly of Divines at London were employed by their Masters.

That which makes this Temptation the lesse dangerous, is, That the Letter that they wrote upon this subject to their Neighbours, could very hardly be understood: This venerable Company of Divines of consummate English Divines, and the Deputies of Scotland, to the Reformed Churches of France, the Low-Countries, and Switzerland, &c.

A a

Know-

Knowledge, and the flower of Eloquence of that Party, writ a Latine Letter to the French, Flemens, and Switzer, wherein there wants nothing in the Outward but Language and Common sense, a most worthy cover for the Inward; for so evil a drogue there needed not a Letter Box. This Epistle, amongst a ridiculous affectation of Criticisms, Greek and Poetical phrases, and many Rhetorical Figures, is here and there fill'd with Solecisms, Barbarisms, and the like Grammer Elegancies, like a foundred horse that goes up and down; and it's pitty to behold how their Eloquence stumbles in Capriolinge.

This piece of Latine was much admired, and many praises heaped upon the Authors, and publick thanks, by speciall command, given to them by the house of Commons, so much is Knowledge valued in this Reformed party. It's likely many hands contributed to the composing of it, for it's a patched discourse, made up of divers of pieces altogether unlike one another, and goes by leaps and skips, as an empty Cart in a craggy and stony way, I will not burthen my discourse, with the faults of Children. I will onely give you a taste in the Margin.

For the Margin.

In the Title Littera a Conventu Theologorum in Arglia, a barbarous phrase.

In the same, Prout Ordinaverat Honoratissima Domus Communium; Ordinare, doth not signifie to Command, but to put in Order. Honoratissima

rarissima is wholly barbarous.

In the first Page, Diu est ex quo credidimus calicem hunc quem epotandum vindex Dei manus exhibuit vestris auribus insonuisse. Rare Tavern Eloquence, to make the Cups, and Goblets to sound.

In the second Page, Reformationis impedimenta, They would have said, hinderances of Reformation; These Masters knew not that the Plural impedimenta, signifies Baggage.

In the same, Eo usque profecit sceleratissima factio, Surely they should have said, progressa est, for proficere signifies to advance in that which is good.

In the same period there is a Solecisme, Eo usque profecit, ut oportet, they should have said oporteat.

There is a Solecisme of the same nature in the third Page, Hosce cum gens illa rejecerat, they should have said rejecisset; I wish these grave Divines would learn that the Prepositions ut and cum govern the Conjunctive in the signification they give it.

In the second Page, Canobia Angliæ tolerata; this is another Solecisme, for according to their sense they should have said, in Angliæ; in these words there are yet more incongruities in the Truth then in the Grammar, for both God and men know that it is false, that there hath been any Convent or Monastery tollerated in England for above these eighty years.

In the third Page, Missi hinc trans Alpes mandaturi & ab ipsa Roma recepti nuntii, There can be nothing spoken more barbarous nor more false.

In the same Page, Dicam dicere, they have heard speak of Dicam scribere, which signifies to appeal in Justice.

In the same Page, Injurias in apricum proferre; Excellent Elegance, to put the injuries in the summe.

In the fourth Page, Natio altera triumphasset in alterius sanguine; they should have said de sanguine.

In the same Page, Deus qui rodentem sensim tineam prius egerat rugientem Leonem induit, that is to say, that God hath plaid the person of a knawing moth, which is a very strange conception. Let these Divines correct either their sense or their Latine.

In the same Page, where they would say, the Principall of Ireland, they call'd them Principulares, which is a word of Campagne, and doth not signifie that they would say, and yet the true word is Principules.

In the fifth Page, Delitendum; they would have said delitescendum: They should do well to reade over their Conjugations again.

In the same Page, undique instead of ubique.

In the same Page, Cluet instead of Cluit, and yet the word is nothing worth in Prose.

In Page the sixth, Sacratissimam the word is Barbarous.

In the same Page, Gladius Anglicam saginatus carne; that is to say, the sword fatted with the flesh of the English: The word saginare is not proper, but for a creature or beast that a man feeds; its a very extravagant fancy to fat a Sword as a Hogg.

In

In the same Page, That which the Irish had invaded by Armes, they call quod Nacti sunt, as if they had met with it by chance or hazard.

In the seventh Page, Modo evenire possit, ut Ecclesia redimeretur: Its a Solecism, they should have said redimatur: This people are wholly out of Tense and Mood.

In the same, Veritatis pedissequi sumus & amasii puritatis; amasius is a dishonest word, and pedissequi ridiculous, and both the one and the other very improper: Behold the sense in English; We are Lacquies of the Truth, and Paramours of the court of purity; These are lofty imaginations fit to entertain the brave wits with.

A little after they enrich the Latine tongue with a new word Remonstrantias, peradventure in their next Edition they will consider whether they should write Remonstrantias, or Remonstraciones.

There also is a Solecism, they make use of the Adverb utroque, which is an Adverb of Motion, as if it were an Adverb of Rest.

In the eighth Page, Protestati sumus, its a barbarous word, and is found in no good Author: But I think not my self bound to write out all their faults, the most part whereof hath this commodity, that the intricateness and obscurity of their muddy style hinders our sight.

The next time they write to Strangers in this style, I counsel them to send an Interpreter with their Letter; for this Latine Monsieur Salmasius, the Prince of Learning of this age could not understand: And in the mean while these Gray beards should do well, to imploy some time, when their State Affairs will give them leave, to learn their Grammer, that Strangers may not laugh at their childish Eloquence.

And for the present they are obliged in charity (for this their Epistle being Printed and sent to seventeen States and Churches beyond sea) to some stranger, who out of compassion lent it good Latine, but it was a year and half after: Tis pity he spoil'd their work, for he should have left the Form and the Matter, the one being futable to the other.

Now should we impute their Latine to their want of Knowledge, did they not in this their Epistle tell us, That they were a most Venerable Company of excellent persons in Wisdom Learning and Piety. The same also sufficiently proved by the Testimony of some of their Company, which were members of the same Assembly, in which the other are not behind them in requital, and in magnifying their Persons and Actions to the skies.

facit.*

It's the old custom of this Faction to commend one another, and when they print any Book, they borrow of one or two of their Friends, Epistles and Prefaces in Commendation of the Work, wherein ordinarily they give the Author excessive praises: Never did the Bishops assume half the Titles that they give one another; As the dunghill Cocks have the greatest Combes, so the meanest spirits are most arrogant and proud, taking on them many high Titles. A great man in France compared compared such kind of persons to the old Writings full of abbreviations, saying that where there are many Titles, there is little Learning.

But we will labour to discipher their Latine so farre as may serve our present purpose, for which the last Interpreter will much help us.

They pray the Forrain Churches, but almost in a commanding way, that they would recommend their Cause to God in their publique prayers, and require it, sine conditione, without any condition, and will not be refused, and they would have them make Apologies for the innocency of the Covenanters, in their Assemblies. Must the Churches then of France for to content them, without considering the salvation of their souls, the safety of their persons, make publique prayers in their Assemblies for the Covenanters? Preach to the people that their Warre is Lawfull and Holy? and that after being questioned by the Magistrates of a contrary Religion, constantly maintain that it is the Cause of God, whatsoever may happen to their Goods, Lives and the profession of the Gospel?

But behold here that which is worse, in the conclusion of the Oath of the Covenant, which they sent with their Epistle, to all the Neighbour Churches, they invite them earnestly to take this Oath or the like: And above all, they invite those Churches who live under the power of a contrary Religion: The Invitation is in form of a prayer, That it would please God to encline by their examples the other Churches that groan under the yoke of Antichrist's

Tyranny, and associate themselves with this Covenant or the like. For to take then their Summons in their own sense, that is to say, That the Churches of France to please them, would make a Covenant against their Sovereign, expecting, as a thing which they need not doubt, that the English Covenanters would overcome their enemies in an instant, and would be ready at the day appointed, to succour their Confederates beyond the seas, with their victorious Armies, before their King justly provoked, should ruine them. The Covenanters Declarations, especially in the year 1642. flatter these poor Churches with this hope, and through all their discourse clearly resolv'd to go forth and pull down Antichrist in all Countries, and make a general Conquest for Jesus Christ. These are very like the Messages that John of Leyden sent to Munster to make all the Commons in Germany to rise, and all the world if it were possible.

Not that the Leaders of the Covenant, considering their strength and interest, thought themselves capable of so vast a design, but according to my opinion, they had two ends in making this so open a profession: The one, to draw to their party the weak and passionate, who in enterprises have regard to the lustre and promise of the design, and not to the possibility of the Execution. Of such spirits the great Herd of the world is composed; who in the great and publique motions suffer their fancies to be bewitched with Poetical hopes, incompatible with the nature of the Affairs.

Such

Such was the promise of another Declaration, which Lull'd the imaginations of the Adherents, That this Warre would bring them deliverance from all their sufferings and fears, and be the beginning of a new world of Joy and peace, which God would create for their Consolation. For this new world of peace and joy which was but three skips and a stride off, as they thought, they found such besotted spirits who cast themselves headlong into a Gulph of evils without bottom or bounds. The Scots Declaration in the year 1644.

The other apparent end was to gain Credit to their party by the applause of Forreign Churches; to fortifie themselves by the powerful Association of the Low Countries, and to try whether the French of the Reformed Religion were so ill affectionate as to take up Arms against their King, without ever caring what should come after, when they were once engaged in a war wherein formerly they had ill successe. And these people were so void of Charity and Humanity, that they were content to buy an unprofitable reputation to their party, by the certain ruine of those they invire to alliance with them: As he that cared not to cut down his neighbours Oak, were it but to make himself a pick-tooth.

For suppose that the French Churches should have suffered themselves to be gained by their perswasions: In what condition were they in to succour them? Could they have furnished Money, Arms, Men and Shipping? Had they the means to put out the fire, when they had once kindled it? All the succours that that these Gentlemen could give them, would be to declare the Votes of the two Houses, That the Armes of the Churches of France were Defensive and Just, and those of their King Offensive and Unlawfull: Or have Declared his Majesty fallen from his Dignity and Crown of France, as They declared those two Illustrious Princes, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice, sons of the late King of Bohemia, excluded from succession in the Palatinate; which Vote shall take place, when the Masters of the Covenant shall have Conquered the Palatinate by their Armes, in spite of the Forces of France, the Emperour, and Spains, and they become sole Arbiters of the Empire. Before the Covenanters come to the end of this design, a little too far off, these brave Princes will have leisure to make their peace, and many things may intervene, which will induce their Judges to abate of their so great severity.

For to perswade these poor Churches to cast themselves headlong into Ruine, the Assembly at London, in their Epistle labour to exasperate them, by the remembrance of all that they had suffered, and perswaded them that all Churches on this side, as well as on the other side of the Seas, were concluded to be ruined by the same Agents; that after the Churches of England and Scotland should be devoured, they would then fall upon their Neighbours; and that it was not against the men, but against the profession of the true Religion and against Godliness that their Enemies made Warre: Whereby they would make

make the Neighbour Churches believe, that King Charles Confederated with the Pope to ruine the Reformed Religion, and that after he had dispatched his own subjects, he would do the like to his Neighbours of the same Religion.

There needs no great measure of the Gift of discerning Spirits, to judge by what spirit these Grave Divines were led, who take such pains to send their Brethren to the slaughter, within and out of their Kingdom, and to make the Doctrine of the Gospel a Trumpet of Sedition, to Arm subjects against their Princes, and put all Christendom into a Flame of bloody and unnatural Warres.

And therefore they had reason to confesse themselves thus to Forraign Churches, they beseech them to excuse them that they had not writ sooner, alleading (according to the second Interpretation of their Friend) That since they were assembled, they found themselves so amazed with the wine of Astonishment, that God had given them to drink, that they had wholly forgot their duty: But in the Addition which they disperse amongst all the Churches, they do not acknowledge themselves only Attonitos amazed, but Ebrios drunken, and both in the one and the other they had great reason. Oh the force of Truth! Oh the wonderfull Providence and Justice of God, to draw from these subtil and crafty souls, their own Condemnation! How is it possible that so many choice and picked Divines, whereof this Assembly was composed, should be so blinded, as to let passe from them so shamefull a Confession in the name of all their Body, and of all their Party, to be divulged through all the Churches of Europe? And yet we are herein to praise God, that in this their Astonishment, he hath given them a little interval, that they come to their senses to make this acknowledgement.

They needed not to specify to us in what they were forgetful of their Duty; their comportments justify their words, that they had wholly forgotten it. It appears also that they had forgot their duty to God, their King, their Country, and to the Church from which they received their Ministry, and to which they had sworn Obedience, and towards them also to whom they write: For if they had born any Brotherly affection, they would not have been so forgetful as to write to them, and in such a Style, and by a publick Declaration. They would have taken heed to render them odious and suspected without cause, and to draw upon them persecution, from which there could proceed no other fruit, unlesse to make them companions in their miseries. For to render us companions in their crimes, we hope they shall never obtain. But these Divines and their Masters who employ them, shall find themselves deceived in their design, to induce the Reformed Churches of France to shake off the yoke of their King, under colour of shaking off the yoke of Antichrist.

The fidelity and peaceable conversation of these Churches, doth take away even the shadow of such things from their Superiours, whose justice is such, that they will not condemn lemn the Subjects of their King for the offences of strangers; but will be more careful to protect the innocent, than their ill neighbours are active to render them blame-worthy and unhappy. The King and his Council need not fear the French of the Reformed Religion will take the Oath of the Covenant, to which they are invited with so much earnestness and craft, for to speak of them in the terms of one of their beloved Pastors. They take no Oaths to others, but to their Sovereign Princes, they cast not their eyes on a stranger, they hold that it is not for a Subject to find occasion of disobedience in the Religion of his Prince, making Religion a Match to give fire to Rebellion, they are ready to expose their lives for the preservation of their King against whomsoever it be, were it one of their own Religion; whosoever should do otherwise, should not defend Religion, but serve his Ambition, and should draw a great scandal upon the Truth of the Gospel. This is the Doctrine wherein they are instructed; This is the Profession in which all good Frenchmen of the Reformed Religion will live and die.

But if strangers whose heads run round with the wine of astonishment, will force the Churches of France to drink of their Cup, they will use the French freedom, refuse to pledge them, and behold their zeal to press them to do as they do, with despite and compassion; Let them not think it strange that they run not with them into the same excess of riot, they do not offend them, for whilst they have this strong wine in their heads, they keep their sobriety and are filled; beseeching

beseeking God to shew mercy upon those who would seduce them. Now as it is the custome of drunken persons, who would draw others into the same excesse with themselves, and to drink according to their pleasure, to make them beleeve that they have seen them themselves in that condition; so the English Covenanters to defend their actions, and augment their Party, alledge very often to the French Churches their wars for Religion, the remembrance whereof is very sad; and to use this Argument to seduce them, is no other thing than to counsel them to be miserable because they have been so, and to go with their eies shut, and run the remains of their broken vessel against the rock where they were shipwrackt.

Moreover, its very unjust in them to impute to the whole body the actions of a party; for in the late wars all the Churches on this side the River Loyre, continued in their obedience, and very neer the half of the other Churches. The people were carefully preserved in their duties by their faithful Pastours. This holy Doctrine which condemnes the resisting of higher powers, and commands to wait patiently deliverance from God, and to suffer for righteousness sake, was most pressed and urged in their Churches; and whilst some of the Religion were in Arms during the Minority of the King, they preached at Paris, Their strength was to sit still.

Isai. 30. 7.

There fell lately into my hands an Epistle well penn'd, which was sent to the State Assembly of Rochel, in the beginning of their sitting, sitting, to encline them to peace & the obedience of his Majesty. Behold here a passage of it.

I think it very profitable for you to be informed the truth, what the opinions and dispositions of our Churches are, by persons that have a particular knowledge of them : You are now debating (Gentlemen) of the separation of your Assembly for to obey his Majesty, or of its subsistence, and to give order to your affairs, I am bound to tell you, that the general desire of our Churches is, that it would please God to continue peace unto us under the obedience of his Majesty, and that seeing the King is resolved to employ his Armies to make you obey, they promise themselves so much of you, that you will do what possibly you can to avoid this tempest, and yield rather to necessity, than enter into a war, wherein the ruine of a great part of our Churches are certain, and into a trouble wherein we may behold the entrance, but cannot see the issue, and that ye will take away the pretext from them who drive on the King to fall upon us. Those that fear God desire that if we must be persecuted, it should be in bearing the Crosse of Christ, and for the profession of the Gospel. In Brief, I assure you that the greatest and best part of our people desire you to decline this unjust enterprise.

Here is not the authority of a single person, 'tis the testimony of the greatest and best part of the Churches of France, 'tis a general Declaration of the Churches and of those amongst them who feared God, that the duty of Christians persecuted is, to bear the Crosse, not Arms. It's then very falsely and injuriously done, that the example of the French Churches should be so often and importunately alledged by

by the Covenanters to justifie the Subjects resisting their Sovereign, since that ever in the time of war, the greatest and best part were against it.

A French Divine who loved both his Religion and King, found himself so prick'd by this reproach made to the Generalitie of his partie, that he prayed us to insert here this expreſſion of his judgment and of the soundest part of the Churches of France. The war for Religion in this Kingdom is a wound yet fresh; and ye can hardly touch it, but ye will hurt it and make it smart; and its very sore against my will that I must touch it: But I am constrained to it, by the frequent Declarations of the Covenanters, who have nothing so strong nor so frequent for to move the people to take up Arms against their King, as to propose to them the example of the French Churches, as a pattern which they ought and are bound to follow. Would to God that in leaving us there, they would have given us liberty to hold our peace; but since they will not give over publishing abroad and making all places ring with our calamities, the remembrance whereof we rather desire should be for ever buried, since they impute the actions of some few to the Generality of our Churches, and even to Religion it self; and since that they alledge our errors, for to exhort us to return to them again, and since they change the subject of our Repentance and sorrow, into Rules for their imitation, and into Precepts of the Gospel. Is it not now high time to speak, and preferre the Interest rest of Gods Glory, and of the Truth of his Word, above the credit of men whatsoever they be, yea, and of our own too. Let God be true and every man a Liar. Confesse thy fault, Rom. 3.4. Jo. 7.19. and give Glory to the Lord God of Israel. Mr. River was not ashamed to call these our stirrings, J. suita culpam nostrorum, the fault of his Countrey-vapulans; men, and this was spoken as a Champion of Cap. 26. the Truth, to confesse it so freely, that it Art. 2. was both to our sin and dammage, wherein (as he himself declares) he agrees with Monsieur du Moulin, who in his second Epistle to Monsieur Balzak, makes the same confession in equivalent terms. Such was the Piety and ingenuity of these Godly and Learned persons; that all their care and pains was to defend the Truth only, and not their persons.

It would be a great honour for the Churches of France with one consent publikely to declare that they judge all wars of Subjects against their Sovereign, unlawful, and to exhort their Brethren of England to Obedience and Fidelity to their Prince; than for to preserve the Credit of some of their party, and suffer their Actions to serve as snares to the weak Consciences of their Neighbours, and of pretext to those who labour to corrupt the Doctrine of the Gospel.

My self being a member of the Reformed Church of France, doubt not but I shall be owned and approved to give an Answer for them to the Summons of a strange Covenant.

An Answer for the Churches of France.

“Its a very great affliction to us to behold
“the Famous Churches of Great Britain to “destroy themselves, for controversies with“out necessity; & which might have been easi“ly composed: And that which toucheth us “most, is, the danger of the Truth, which is “much weakned by these Divisions; for its
“to be feared, that in your contending and “striving one with another, you overturn not “the Candlestick of the Gospel, and that “God being provoked, takes not away his sa“ving Light, which was not given to lighten
“you one to fight against another.

“We will not enter into the causes of your “quarrels, and could wish that you had left “out the remembrance of ours, and had not “employed the unfortunate actions of your “poor Neighbours, which Anguish and Ter-“our produced, to serve as Example to your “people to take up Arms against their King.
“They were but the lesser part of our “Churches, that were involved in that party.
“The signal testimonies of our Fidelity to “the Crown, ever since the reducing of Ro- “chel, and other places which were in our “hands, doe efface the memorie of the “Troubles moved in their behalf; and the “cause of these motions being equitably con“sidered by sober and moderate spirits, “would beget pity rather than hatred: For “if just fear could justifie Arms against their “lawful Sovereign, those of our Religion
“who bare Arms in this occasion, could re“present to you, that when the King demand“ed back again the places that he had granted

"ed them for their security, they had great "occasion to fear, that with these places, they "should lose the security of their Consci-
 "ences and Lives, in which they were happi"ly deceived: For the Late King who was
 "as gentle in making use of a victory, as va"liant in gaining one, ever laboured more to "comfort, than to punish, and compassion
 "stifling his anger, made them know that "the strongest place for the security of sub"jects is the Clemency and Justice of their "Soveraign. Oh these Royal vertues were "eminently manifest in him, whom God had "given you for your King! Who being the "Defender of the Reformed Christian Faith,
 "and publishing his most holy Profession,
 "with such Protestations which gave us full
 "satisfaction, we cannot see, how you can "alledge the Example of our taking up of "Arms, should they be the most just of the "world, having not the same subjects of fear.
 "The security of your Consciences and Lives "were without question. But you are not the "first whom ease and long prosperity hath "carried to the same impatience, to which "others have been driven by affliction.

A rare pattern for a Conqueror.

"And since then ye addresse yourselves to "us to give you advice: We beseech you con"sider, that to take counsel of your Friends,
 "it must not be when their swords are in their "hands, and their enemies before them;
 "but when they are quiet and at peace: 'Tis
 "not from our Souldiers, but our Divines,
 "that you should enquire whether you should "draw your swords against your Prince, if “you referre your selves to them, they will “all conclude for the Negative. For whilst “our wars continued, whereof you have too “good a memory, not one of all our Divines “maintained those dangerous Maximes which “is now defended by your Sermons and writings. They that say most for their Party, excuse it, and lay it upon necessity.

“’Tis not from any of our Books that ye “have drawn these vile Maximes, That the “Authority of the Sovereign Magistrate is of “Humane Right. That the people is above
 “their King, That the people gave the power to the Prince, and may take it away when they please, That Kings are not the anointed of the Lord, That if the King fail in performing the Oath at his Coronation, the Subjects are absolved from their Oaths of Allegiance, That if the Prince falls from the Grace of God, the people are loosed from their subjection, That for to establish a Discipline, which they account to be the only Kingdom of Jesus Christ, Subjects may take up Arms against their Prince, That Kings are to be judged before their Subjects, That the Civil Government ought to be formed according to the pattern of the Ecclesiastical, which is not Monarchical. This Maxime tends to the abolition of Royalty in all States.

“In all the writings of our Divines, ye “find no such matters, but such as teach Subjects Loyalty, Humility, Obedience and Patience. All agree together with the ancient Christians, and say that prayers and tears

“tears are the weapons of the Church. We ne- Buckler

“Very often those that teach well are se“duced to do ill, being overcome by tempta“tion, and yet very few ever go so far, as to “teach ill to justify their Actions; God hath “kept us hitherto from that: And although it “may happen unto us, as unto others, to break

 “not a more certain sign of a people forsaken “of God, than this.

“Therefore with the same liberty you in“vite us to maintain your Opinions, by a “publike Association, we earnestly beseech
 “you to correct your own, and condemn
 “all your Maxims, contrary to sound Do-

“ As for the quarrel ye have against Anti-“ Christ, we should be very glad to joyn with “ you, provided that ye observe these two “ conditions; The one not to call Anti-“ Christ that which is not, for we gather by “ your Epistles, and Declarations, that you “ give the Title of upholders of Antichrist to “ many of our Brethren, whose Confession “ agrees with ours, and with whom you “ ought to bear, and with Charity amend “ their faults, on condition that they may

“ The other Condition is, that ye fight

all things let us remember our sins, not doubting but God sends us these scourges for our sins; by this our impatience will be bridled by Humility: Moreover lets remember that it is not for us to remedy these evils; and that all that we have to do, is to beg help of God, in whose hands the hearts of Kings and motions in Kingdoms are. He said a little before, That the Word of God bound us not only to be subject to Princes that are worthy of our duty, but to all Princes whatsoever and howsoever they came to the Sovereignty, and although they do nothing lesse then perform the duties of Good Sovereigns.

Com. upon Daniel
cap. 4.
ver. 19.

In his Commentary upon Daniel, Let us learn, saith he, by the example of the Prophet, to beseech God for Tyrants, if it shall please him to subject us to their inordinate pleasure; for what though they be unworthy of all Offices of Humanity, yet neverthelesse because it is by the will of God that he Commands, its our duty to bear the yoke patiently, not only because of wrath, as Saint Paul admonisheth, but also for conscience sake, otherwise we are not only Rebels against them, but against God.

Institut.
li. 4. c. 20.
Sect. ult.

This Lesson is of the same Authors, Let this be ever in our memory, that the same Divine Authority that gives Authority to Kings, establisheth also the most wicked Kings: Oh let never these Seditious thoughts enter into our spirits, that we should deal with the King as he deserves, and that it is not reasonable to yield the duty of subjects to him who will not perform the duty of King to us. Which is notwithstanding the arguing of the Covenanters.

Pet. Mart-
loc. 20.

Peter Martyr an Italian, but a Minister in those those Churches our enemies invite to associate with them, is not lesse contrary to them. Expounding that place of the Proverbs, By me Kings Reign, saith, That under the Name of Kings the Text understands also Tyrants: Whence he collects this consequence, Therefore learning hence that thy King is established by God, beware thou never conspirest any seditious thing in the State, all that thou must do when thou art oppressed, is to appeale to the tribunall of God, there being no other superiour power to whom a Tyrant ought to obey.

He saith also very pertinently, and worthy our best observation; That then when God would chastice the Kings of Judah for their sins, he did not do it by the Jewes, but by the Babylonians, Assyrians, and Egyptians, shewing by the conduct of his Justice and providence, that it is not for subjects to take knowledge of the faults of their Soveraignes, but that they ought to leave them wholly to God, who hath other meanes in his hand to punish them, and reduce them to their duty.

Surely if Calvin and Martyr had lived in these daies, and were beneficed in England, they would eject them out of their benefices for this troublesome Doctrine, which hinders the progresse of the holy Covenant, and fills their consciences full of scruples, whom they instruct to rebel against their Soveraign for the Lords sake.

And above all Monfieur Deodati would be very ill dealt with by them, for being Author of that excellent Epistle sent from the Church of Genevah, to the Ecclesiasticall Assembly at

London;

London, in which your good King is highly prayed for the Justice and Clemency of his proceedings in this present quarrell; the popular tumults condemned, which forced him to retire from his Parliament, and these Gentlemen earnestly entreated to dispossesse their Spirits of all factious inclinations, and to wash off this fowle spot by which they have and do defame the pure profession of the Gospel, giving occasion for the world to believe, that the Reformed Religion hath a secret hatred and Antipathy against the Majesty of Kings and soveraign Authority; against this Epistle, our enemies vomited out many outrageous words in their books, maintaining that it was supposititious and invented by some prophane Atheist. Behold here the thanks that this great and learned person, and the reverend Ministers his brethren, received for their charitable and truely Christian Counsell.

And this is further to be observed, that the Assembly at London having sent their Epistle and Oath of their Covenant to seventeen forrain Churches, whereof the Churches of France made but one, they make no noise of the Answers they received, which doth evidently testifie they did not satisfie them, and that they durst not produce them, for fear of making it appear that the generality of the Reformed Churches were ashamed of their actions, and condemned the insurrections of subjects against their Soveraigns under pretence of Reformation.

This divinity of Rebellion being founded upon one onely Maxime, that the power of Kings is of humane and not divine right, and that their right to the Kingdome is but a participation between them and the people. It's much to purpose to produce here what the Churches of France hold hereupon, and how they refuse the reasons of the Jesuits which are the same with the Covenanters: Behold the last Chapter of the Buckler of faith, which is a garment so fit for the size of both parties, that after the one hath made use of it, the other may put it on, and they need change nothing but the persons.

Thomas the Prince of the School, Divines faith, that the power of Princes and Lords is but of humane institution, and comes not from God; to whom we may joine Cardinal Bellarmin in his book against Barkley, and Mounſieur Arnoux, who upon the second Article of our Confession, calls the power of the Magistrate a humane law, conformable to the Apothegme of reverend Father Binet the Jesuit, who told Mr. Casaubon, that it were better all Kings were killed, then a confession should be revealed, because the power of Kings is but an humane right, but Confession is of Divine right.

The reasons they bring for this opinion, are,

“ 1. That the first King that was raised in the world, namely Nimrod, was raised by violence; and not by the ordinance of God.

“ 2. That the most part of the Empires, and Jesuitam.

“and Kingdoms that ever have been, came by “Conquest, one Nation overcoming the o“ther ; or by some Prince, whose Ambition “moved him, to pick an unjust quarrell with “his Neighbour.

“3. That Emperors and Kings are esta“blished by humane ways, whether they come “to the Crown by Hereditary succession, or “by Election, since there is no extraordinary “Revelation, nor no Rule in the Word of “God, that a Nation are bound to follow, ra“ther Succession which is Hereditary, then “that which is by Election.

“4. That there is no expresse command of “God, to obey Henry rather than Lewis, or “to acknowledge this man rather than that “for King.

“5. That for these considerations, the-“Apostle Saint Peter, calls our obedience
 “to Kings an Ordinance of man ; saying, “Submit your selves to every Ordinance of man,
 “for the Lords sake, whether it be to the King as “Supreme, or unto Governours, &c.

2. 13.

These are the ordinary reasons of the Cove-nanters, if they should disavow them, their Books would witnesse against them, for they are full of them. But I would they could get them out of the Schools of the Jesuites, and come and learn the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches, which speak thus :

“We on the contrary maintaine, that “obedience to Kings and Magistrates, is of “Divine Right, and founded upon an Ordi“nance of God, for which purpose those pas“sages serve, which commands obedience to “Kings,

“Kings, and the higher Powers, as to persons “whom God hath set up, and whom we can“not resist, without resisting God. There is “no power but of God, the powers that be, are or- “dained of God, whosoever therefore resisteth the “power, resisteth the Ordinance of God, Rom. 13.
 “vers. 1, 2.

“Item, We must be subject, not onely for “wrath, but also for conscience sake, V. 5, 7. And “Saint Peter, in that place, they object against “us, wills that we yield our selves subjects to “Kings for the Lords sake. So that, although “Nebuchadnezzar was a wicked King, and a “Rod in the hand of God, to destroy the Na“tions, notwithstanding God speaks thus to “him by his Prophet Daniel, Thou O King Dan. 2.
 “art a King of Kings, for the God of heaven 37.
 “hath given thee a Kingdom, power, strength and “glory. Moses, the first Prince and Law“giver of Israel, was established by an Ordi“nance of God, and Joshua after him, Num.
 “27. 18. Saul, the first King of Israel, and “David his Successor, were annointed by “Samuel, and consecrated to be Kings, ac“cording to the Ordinance of God, 2 Kings “9. God sent to Jehu, a Prophet, for to an“noint him King of Israel. It's God that gird- “eth the loins of Kings with a girdle, Job 12.
 “18. God is he that Governes, or as our “Translation read it, God is the Judge, he “putteth down one, and setteth up another, Psal.
 “75. 7. The Lord raiseth the poor out of the “dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dung-hill,
 “that he may set him with Princes, Psal. 113.
 “7, 8. Certainly, if the providence of God “ extends it self even to the feeding of fowls;

 “ and giving food to the young ravens, when “ they cry unto him, Psal. 147. Yea, as to “ ture and by chance.

“ The Reasons they alledge against so “ evident and apparent a Truth, are lame and “ Interfere.

“ 1. They say, That Nimrod, the first King
 “ in the World was raised by violence : But “ that is false, that before Nimrod there was “ no Sovereign Prince in the World. Before “ Nimrod, the Fathers and Heads of Families, “ were Kings and Priests, and sovereign Prin“ ces of their Families ; For after the flood “ men lived five or six hundred years ; So that “ it was easie for one man to behold five hun“ dred, yea a thousand persons of his posterity, “ over whom he exercised a paternall power,
 “ and by consequence a Sovereignty, for there “ was no other form of Royalty in the earth, “ whose Children and servants being joyned “ together, one Family could make a great “ Common-wealth : And even in the time “ of Abraham, then when the life of man was “ shorter, we read how Abraham was called “ by the Children of Heath, a Prince of God, “ that is to say, a mighty Prince ; And of his “ own Family he drew out three hundred and “ eighteen

" eighteen souldiers, to whom if we joyn the " maid servants, and those servants who were " not fit to bear armes in war; ye cannot but
 " confesse, that although he had no Children,
 " yet his own Family were capable to fill a " good Town.

" 2. They object to us also, that the most " part of the Empires and Kingdoms, have " had their beginning by Conquest and vio" lence, and therefore not by the Ordinance
 " of God : And that if the Conqueror had " invaded the Country of another, by the Or" dinance of God, the inhabitants of the " Country had offended God in opposing and " resisting him. Upon which, I say, That " those inhabitants in a Countrey whom a " strange Prince will invade, do well to oppose
 " and resist him, and if in this defensive war,
 " the Usurper is slain, he is justly punished.
 " But if he become master of them, and if all " the ancient possessors of the Kingdome are " extinguished, and the States of the Country
 " Assembled contrive a New form of State;
 " and all the Officers throughout the King-
 " dome give to the New King an Oath of Fi" delity; Then we must believe, that God
 " hath established such a Prince in the King-

 " Kings and People, transfers Kingdoms, and " disposeth of the events of Battels according " to his good pleasure.

" 3. It matters not to say, That Princes;

 " bound to obey him? Our Adversaries in-

 " of Divine right, although the members of " Parliament enter by Election, and oftentimes
 " by close and under-hand dealing, and by " some crafty Caballe.

" Let them hold that the Parliament is by

is the Supreme power, but that power appertaines to the Sovereigne Court of Parliament, which not us hark to a better Author.

" 4. That if there be no Command in the " Word of God to obey Henry rather then
 " Lewis, &c. It's sufficient that there is a " Command for to obey the King, and a " Command to keep our Oath and fidelity
 " we have sworn, and by consequence to be
 " faithfull to the King to whom we have ta-

 " more Command of God found to injoyne
 " us particularly to obey the Parliament that " began November the third, 1640. to which " neverthelesse, our adversaries, accounted " themselves to be subject by Divine right.
 " So that if this consideration should take " place, it would follow, that none of them
 " that are now in the World, are obliged by

" Divine right, to fear God or to believe in " Jesus Christ, because the Scripture hath not " particularly appointed Thibalt, Antony or
 " William, that they should fear God, and be" lieve in Jesus Christ; It sufficeth that the " word of God conveyes Rules, which bind
 " particulars without naming them.

" S. Peter truly in the place before cited
 " calls the obedience we owe to Kings, a hu" mane Ordinance, and that either because " Kings command many things, which in " their nature are not of Divine right, as their " commands which forbid wearing of gold or
 " silver, or the like things on their apparrell,
 " or because they attaine this power by certain
 " humane meanes introduced by custome,
 " which notwithstanding hinders not but their " power may be founded in the Word of God,
 " when they are once established, for as we
 " said before, the Question is not of the means
 " by which a Prince comes to the Kingdom,
 " but what Obedience is due to him, af" ter he is once intaled. And therefore
 " Saint Peter after he had called this Ordi" nance an humane Ordinance, commands us
 " to subject our selves for the Lords sake, and
 " to obey his command.

" Whosoever makes the authority of Kings
 " depend upon the institution of men and not " upon the Ordinance of God, lessens their " Majesty more then three quarters, and takes " from that which secures their Lives and " Crowns, more then their Guards or mighty
 " Armies, which plants in the Subjects hearts,
 " Fear instead of Love and Reverence. Then

“ the fidelity and Obedience of Subjects “ will be firme and lasting , when it “ shall be incorporated with piety , and ac“ counted a part of Religion, and of the fer“ vice we owe to God.

This foundation being overturned, that the Authority of Kings is but an humane Ordinance, that which they build upon it, must necessarily fall , for to reason thus, that the people may take away their Authority from the King, because they gave it him, is to prove one absurdity by another ; as if one should prove the Moon might be burnt because its made of Wood. For to say the people gave the power to the King, is to imagine that which never was, no not in Kingdoms which are Elective. The People give not the King his Authority, for they cannot give that they have not, but he defers his obedience to Henry or Charles. But this Prince being Elected, receives his Authority from God, as the beginning and source from whence all power flows. By me Kings Raign ; And there is no

Pro. 8. Power but of God. None ought therefore to 15. take this power which God hath given
 Rom. 13. him.

Thus the Wife chooseth her Husband, and gives him a promise of obedience in marriage, but it is not she that gives him his Authority, that comes from above ; And there is as great an absurdity to say, that the People may depose the King, because they chuse him, as to affirm, that the Woman may put away her Husband, or subject him to her, when she shall judge expedient, because that she made

choice of him : For the woman looseth the liberty of her choice by the bond of marriage, and the People likewise loose the liberty to revoke their choice when the Prince Elected is declared King. Tis a strange consequence to say that the people may take away the Kings Authority, because they have sworn obedience to him, the Election is no other thing. And it's a reason that overthrowes it self to say that the people may take from the King his Authority, because they gave it him : For put the case that it were true that the people gave Authority to the King whom they Elect ; since then the People have given away their Authority, tis no more in them. This maxime being once admitted, that it is lawfull for every one to take back againe what he hath given, it would break the Laws of Society and fill the world with injustice and confusion ; But let our enemies know, that although the Authority of the King, had not begun, before the Oath of Allegiance, which this Parliament took in a body at the beginning of their sitting, yet the body of the state made thereby an irrevocable gift of their obedience to the King, and from this Oath we draw a better consequence then theirs ; namely that they cannot dispose of their obedience since they have given it to the King ; So that were their reasons good, they would be of no force but in Kingdoms which were Elective, and make nothing against King Charles, for neither he, nor any of the Kings his Ancestors in all ages past, ever came to the Crown by Election.

It's not to purpose to alledge the Oath the King took at his Coronation, as an agreement and paction made with his People, equivalent to an Election ; For the King receives not his Kingdom at his Coronation, he is King before his Crown is put on, and therefore Watson and Clarke, who conspired against King James of glorious memory, were justly condemned as guilty of high Treason, although they alledged that the King was not then Crowned, and it was judged by the Court, that the Crowning was but a Ceremony, for to make the King known to his People.

It's the like also in France, I judge (saith Bodin) that no man doubts but the King enjoys before his Anointing, the possession and propriety of his Kingdome. Before this Ceremony the King enjoys as fully all his Rights as after, and according to the Laws of France and England, the King never dies, whilst there remaines any of the Royall blood, for in the same hour that the King expires, the lawfull Heir is totally invested of the Kingdom. Wherefore the eldest son of Edward the Fourth, who was murdered by his Uncle Richard, is by generall consent numbered amongst the Kings, and named Edward the Fifth, although he never wore the Crown, nor took any Oath, nor exercised any Authority. Henry the Sixth was not Crowned but in the ninth year of his Reign, and yet before his Coronation, many were attainted of high Treason, which could not have been done, if he had not been acknowledged King.

In the Oathes of the Kings of France and England,

England, at their Coronation, there is no Image of stipulation, Covenant or agreement betwixt them and their subjects. They receive not their Crowns upon any condition, and their People ow their obedience, whether they perform or violate their promises. This Oath is a laudible Custome, profitable to bear up the Authority of the Prince, by the love of his Subjects, and to give to the People this satisfaction, that the King whom God hath given them, hath an intention to govern them with Justice and Clemency, and to preserve their Rights and Liberties.

If the King by his Oath should bind himself to fall from the Right to his Kingdome, when he should violate his Promises, he would then be lesser after his Oath then before, and surely if the Kings did believe they should diminish their propriety by their Oath, they would never take it; and to shew that their Authority depends not of their Oath, but their Oath of their Authority, the Kings of England form it at their pleasure. Very hardly shall you find three that have taken the same Oath without changing some things. That which was presented to Henry the Eighth, which is to be seen in the Rolls, was corrected by his own hand and interlined.

And moreover the Oath is made to God, and not to the People, and binds the Conscience of the Prince but doth not limit his Sovereignty; if the intention of this solemnity were to make a stipulation or agreement with the People, the People at the same time should also take a reciprocall Oath, and in a passion of such importance, there should also passe some publick contract, things which are not practised, so that hereby it evidently appears, that this imagination of the enemies of Monarchy, have not any foundation neither in Law nor Custome.

Some persons think they speak very finely, in saying that the Authority of the King is an Usurpation of the sword, confirmed by Custome, and that if they could gain their liberty by the sword, and confirme it by Custome, their Right would be as good as His, and upon this they Philosophy upon the Resolutions of States, which are in the hand of God, and teach us to follow the course of his Providence.

But by speaking thus they commit a double error, against Conscience, and against Prudence.

As for conscience, the Antient constitution of the State confirmed by so many ages, Statutes, Oaths of allegiance, do suffice to learne all Christians that live under this Monarchy, that it was God that established it, and that by the command of God, they are bound to defend the State under which they are born, and whom the body of the Kingdome hath sworn to maintain. These discourses of following the providence of God in matters of Revolutions of States are then onely seasonable, when the Royall blood is extinguished, or when usurpation hath gained prescription through length of years, but not when they are neer to overthrow the Estate and ruine the King; these considerations are good when the evil is done and out of remedie, but not when they are acting ill, and when the obedience and Loyalty of the subjects may remedy all. The providence of God will never serve for excuse of the wickednesse of men; let us do that which we ought to do, and leave God to do what he pleaserh, and above all, these moralities of revolution of States are worst in their mouthes, who labour to make this revolution in the State, for it's their duty to prevent this revolution with all their power; posterity may excuse themselves by the providence of God in following a new forme of State, whilst those that introduced it, shall be condemned by his Justice.

Besides all this, there is a great want of prudence in this reasoning, for in quarrelling the rights of the King as usurpations of violence and custome, they teach the King to quarrell at their liberties and priviledges for the same reason, yea and by one much greater, for the priviledges of Parliament are much newer then the royall authority, and the King may say they were obtained by force after many long and bloody warres, he might cast off all prescription gained upon the unlimited power of the first Norman Kings, and put himself into all the rights of their Conquests by another. Wise subjects who would keep their priviledges, ought by all meanes to preserve peace, for there is nothing renders Kings more absolute then warre. Under a Royall estate the principall meanes to preserve the peoples liberty, is to maintain the onely authority of the King, dividing it amongst many, they do but multiply their Masters: For its better to have one evil Master, then many good ones.

How the Covenanters have no reason to invite the Reformed Churches, to their Alliance, since they differ from them in many things of great importance.

WE wonder exceedingly how our enemies dare sollicite the Reformed Churches to Covenant with them; From whence comes this great familiarity? Is it because of their great resemblance one with another? Is't that we cannot find? As for Obedience due to the King, which is the principall point of the Covenanters, we have made it already appear, that the Divines of the Reformed Religion are as contrary to the Covenanters as they are to the Jesuites, their Brethren and Companions in bloud and war.

This point being denied them, they care not much for the society of any Church in other points of Doctrine. This is the first and great Commandment of the Covenant, to obey the people against their King, maintaine but this their fundamentall Maxime, and they will give you leave to chuse your Religion, but in many other things this faction differ from the Reformed Churches.

Con-

Concerning the Doctrine of the Lords day, they have a great quarrel against Calvin, who is so far from constraining the Church to a Jewish observation of the Sabbath, that he accounts that the Church is not subjected to the keeping of the seaventh day, a passage which Learned Rivet alledgedh and approves; and to both these, doth Doctor Prideaux, since Bishop of Worcester joyn; who in a discourse of the Sabbath, complains that the English Sabbatarians lean towards Judaism, and go against the common received Doctrine of Divines; never considering into what captivity they cast themselves, in establishing the observation of the seaventh day under Christianity, by the authority of a Mosaical Precept. Mr. Primrose Minister of Rohan hath writ a very Learned Book full of profound knowledge, upon this Subject; where amongst other things, he proves at large how all the Reformed Churches are contrary to this opinion.

Although God hath no need of the errour of men to establish his Service, we so much love the Reverence due to that holy day, that we would not lightly quarrell at any thing thereupon. Let every one enjoy his Opinion, so that God may be served, and the day which is dedicated to him, be not violated, neither by prophaneness nor superstition. But since the Covenanters in this point, are so contrary to the Reformed Churches, and have so often condemned it by their writings, the Assembly at London did very ill to plead conformity with these Churches in this Article, and complain to them of the Liberty the

King gave to poor servants to sport on Sunday after Divine Service.

Rivet about the end of his Exposition of the 4 Command.

So also for the Festivals, although Mr. Rivet declares his desire, that those daies which carry the Names of Saints, should be abolished in England, because of the abuses of these Festivals in the Church of Rome; nevertheless he acknowledgeth and commends the Protestation of the English Church hereupon, that they observe them not for the Service of Saints, but for to Glorifie God, in imitation of the Primitive Church, by the memory of those whom God was pleased to serve himself by, to build up his Church; and exceedingly blames those who accuse them of Idolatry for this Observation.

King James of happy and glorious memory, speaks thus in his Confession of Faith; As for the Saints departed, I reverence their memory in honour of whom, our Church hath established so many daies of Solemnity as there are Saints enrolled by the Authority of the Scripture. The Festivals of Saints scarce exceed the number of the Apostles and Evangelists: Monsieur du Moulin his Champion defends this Confession of his Majesty. Indeed (saith he) we condemn not this Celebration of the memory of Martyrs and Saints; we find the custom good of the English Church, who have daies set apart for the commemoration of the Apostles: And a little after he gives the reason why the French Churches do not follow their example. Because living in a Countrey where Superstition abounds, the people would be easily drawn to abuse them, and be tainted with the common contagion. The prudent and Religious acknowledge with him, That in this the Churches have liberty to Govern themselves according to the Exigences of time and place; and that if in the English Calender there be some Festivals which might well be passed by, and whereof there might be some fear of the consequence; these things ought to have been fairly represented, with the Humility of Subjects, and the Charity of Christians, and not defame the reputation of the English Church, as Idolatrous and a member of Antichrist, nor reform the Church and the King by the Sword, since the Reformed Churches in this point acquits them, and the Example of the Primitive justifies them.

But although they make a great shew of their agreement with other Churches, they make but use of them in some points where they like and approve of, and spare not to accuse them of Idolatry as well as others when they please. 'Tis that which they do without naming them, then when they reject, as gross Idolatry, the observation of the Memory of the daies dedicated to the Nativity, Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ, and the sending of the holy Ghost into the Church. Behold here the Opinion and Practise of the Reformed Churches declared by that Godly and Learned person Testus Hominius, Its a thing of very great profit to the Edification of the Church to commemorate and presse solemnly to the people at certain ordinary times the principal manifestations of God, and his most signal Benefits to his Church, since that the Primitive Church even in the times of the Apostles, dedicated certain daies daies to the Anniversary Celebration of the Nativity, Death, Resurrection and Ascension of Christ, and sending of the Holy Spirit. Its very well done to retain the practise of the ancient Church in a thing which is not simply indifferent, but singularly profitable to Edification, provided that none attribute superstitiously any sanctity to be in the daies; and impose not upon the Consciences of Christians a yoke of absolute necessity, contrary to the Liberty of the Gospel.

Our new Reformers cannot affirm in sincerity that the Clergy of England attributed any inherent Sanctity to be in the daies, or made use of them to impose a yoke of absolute necessity upon their Consciences, there was no need then to abolish them with such rigour, nor to scandalize so many pious souls, nor resist a vain fear of superstition by insolence and prophaneness, which is a remedy worse than the evil. The day of the Nativity in the year 1644 was changed by an expresse publick Order into a Fast, which was the first time since the Apostles that there was any Fast kept that day in the Christian Church, and because many would not fast, they sent Souldiers into their houses a little before Dinner, to visit their Kitchens and Ovens, who carried away the meat and eat it, though it was a Fasting day, who were exempted from Fasting, provided they made others Fast, such insolencies were ordinary, if we may call them insolent Actions which were done by Authority.

And as for Easter day, on which and the daies following the people are enjoined by Act of Parliament to receive the Blessed Sacrament;

rament ; The Devotion of the people in many places have been opposed by violence. We have heard of a Parish, where by main force the Bread and Wine was taken away from the people, who were assembled at Church for this holy Action. Behold their waies to change the times and to reform abuses, which is to resist a supposed superstition, with a true and manifest one, and to make Sacrilege fight for Religion.

Lets passe to other Differences : The Reformed Churches do not beleve as they, that all significant Ceremonies excepting in the Sacraments, are unlawful ; for then, it would follow that to keep off the Hat and kneel at Prayer should be unlawful, for these are Ceremonies which signifie Reverence ; whence many of the Covenanters for this reason refuse to put off their Hats or kneel at Prayer, without being taken notice of and reproved by Authority.

Also the Reformed Churches do not beleve as they, that to be tied to written prayers or Formes of Prayers in the Administration of the Sacraments is to bind the Spirit of God, many of the Covenanters are come so far as to call the usage of Formes of Prayer Idolatry, yea, even the use of the Lords Prayer, which the most part of this Faction refuse to say ; although by a special priviledge its permitted the Minister by their Directory to make use of it if he please ; for its not commanded him.

- According to this Directory (as they call it) that is to say, an Instruction how the Minister should should Govern himself in the Church. The Minister must not say the Apostles Creed, nor repeat the Ten Commandments of God, whereby the people shall be without any Form of what they are to beleeve, or what they are to do; Therefore in the Families of most part of this Faction, they teach not their Children neither the Creed, the Lords Prayer, nor the Ten Commandments; and as for the Children which have learned these holy Forms, they teach them to forget them; Above all things, they take a special care that the Minister ties not himself to any Form of words, as a thing of dangerous consequence, and which hath a taint of Antichrist. Henceforward then there will be no Uniformity in the Divine Service, nor no more help for the infirmity of aged Ministers, nor for the understanding and memory of simple and dull Auditors, who cannot comprehend at the first abroad what the Minister saith, but had need to be well accustomed to him.

Also there will be no more bounds to devout phantastical Spirits, which is the principal vice of this Nation: Every Church will have a particular Order, or rather will have none at all; for the Pastour hath liberty to alter it every time he pleases, nothing being forbidden but to make use of the long established Formes, by the Authentical Acts of many Parliaments, sanctified by the publick Devotion of so many years; and composed by the first Reformers, persons excellent in Piety, and Wisdom, whose books these are not worthy to carry after them.

If these Directors had had any fear of scandalizing the Churches, whom they invited to associate with them; they would never have abolished the Custom received in all the Reformed Churches, and generally in all the Christian Churches of the world; who have certain Forms for the publick Service of God. If they had born any respect to Antiquity, and to the universal consent of the Christian Church in all ages and in all places, they would not have begun in this Age a custom so prodigiously singular, as to banish out of the Church all Forms and Orders of prayers, the Apostles Creed and the Ten Commandments.

There reits yet some Lyrurgies of the ancient Churches and Hymns used in the publick Service, as the eighteenth Canon of the Council of Laodicea, That the Form or Lyrurgie of prayers Morning and Evening ought alwaies to be the same. There hath not, nor ever was there a Church, who had not some Form of prayers, but above all for the higher Powers, but that being abolished in England by the Directors, we need not wonder if many Ministers of the new Edition have long since forgot to make mention of the King in their prayers, and those that pray for him, do it in odious Terms, thrust on by a perverse and malignant zeal, telling God a long story of the sins they impute unto their King, as if they would poure all their choler into the Bosom of God. If any amongst them should thus pray for his Father in the pulpit, Lord grant Repentance to my Father of all his extortions, perjuries, thefts, murders and adulteries, they would account him a fool, or exceedingly wicked, but against their King all things were permitted. Behold the fruits of Abolishing the Divine service, and the liberty of the Prophetique Spirits of the times, fomented by publique order.
D d perjuries,

CHAP. XV.

Of Abolishing the Liturgy, in doing whereof the Covenanters oppose the Reformed Churches.

AMongst their reasons for the Abolishing such good prayers in this time of rebellion, This none of the least; because in the Liturgie there are divers clauses which teach the people the sovereignty of their Prince, and the obedience they owe unto him. There the King is called our most Gracious Sovereign; This would give the Minister the lye, if after that he should call him a most cruel Tyrant, as it was their custome; There they pray, that it would please God to strengthen the King, that he might overcome all his enemies, which were to pray to God for the ruine of their holy Covenant: there God is called the onely governor of Princes, which would contradict the Doctrine and practice of the times, which gives other Governours to Princes besides God, and subject the King to his subjects.

There

There they pray to God that the subjects of the King may duely consider whose authority he hath, namely Gods. If his subjects duely come to consider this, they would lay down their Armes which they had taken up against him, for fear of fighting against God, and would reject the Instruction taught them, that the King holds his authority of men.

There they pray that the subjects of the King may faithfully, serve, honour, and humbly obey him, a prayer of a most dangerous consequence, and would utterly spoile the affaires of the Covenanters, if the Lord should hear them. There they also pray the Lord would so blesse the King, that under him we may be Godly and quietly governed; but is is not under him, but without him, that they would govern us, there being not according to their saying any meanes to live Godly and quietly under his obedience.

In the same manner they pray for all those who are Established in authority under him; but according to the forme of the State turned the bottom upward, as the Presbyterians would have it, they must now pray for all those established in authority over him. Tis also a most dangerous clause in that same prayer, which prayes to God to punish all wickednesse and vice, and to preserve true Religion and piety. For if this prayer were once heard the Zealots of the State who draw their swords against the King, and the preachers of Rebellion, would be constrained to make their Speeches to the people on the Gallowes, and their Hypocrisie would be unmasked, and they rendered the publique object of contempt and scorn, and the Brownist and Anabaptist sent into the Islands of America.

Also the prayer That God would give peace in our daies, would be very unsuitable to the Intentions of the Covenanters, who preach no other thing in substance, then that text ill applied, curled is he that withholds his sword from shedding blood.

They have therefore vored it a point of prudence to lay aside the Liturgie out of their way, which is so contrary to their politique intentions; as for conscience and the government of the Church which is dislocated and dismembred by this Abolition of the Divine service, they will then consider of, after these Gentlemen have served themselves of the General disorder, to build themselves an Empire in the Confusion.

It's most certain that in this change God is farre worse served, there are indeed some certain Ministers capable without the Divine service, to make prayers full of Edification, and truely every Minister of the Gospel ought thus to be prepared, but how many are there amongst them, who for lack of being tied to certain prayers in publique, abuse the patience of God and holinesse of prayer: If the Judicious Auditory at Charenton, should but heare what tales and news these people tell God, the insolent familiarity whereby they discourse and reason with him, their Maledictions against their King, their humorous mad and fantastick tricks, which passe for fallies of Zeale, they would marke our lodging

ing for them in the petites Maisons ( with us here call'd Bedlam ) which might exempt them from the Chatelet, ( but with us from Newgate. )

Certainly as liberty ought not to be a Cloak of maliciouſneſſe, ſo it ought not to be a door open for folly. The Libertine and Capricious humour of the climat in matter of the ſervice of God, ſhould have taught theſe Directors to have reſtrained this licentiouſneſſe rather then to have let looſe the raines, and the importunity of thoſe that demanded this liberty, ſhould have the more induced them to reſuſe it. But what ? thoſe who accorded this moſt pernicious liberty, were the ſame perſons who onely demanded it.

The prophane contempt wherewith they uſed this ſo holy Liturgie, ought not to be imputed to the Inſolency of the Souldiers, but unto the inſtructions which were given them. The Parliaments ſouldiers Catechiſme publiſhed and recommended by ſpeciall Authority, teacheth them to reare it a peeces whereſoever they find it, calling it a moſt Abominable Idol, and a Nurſe of Ignorance and blindneſſe, which fomentſ an Idle, Lazy and diſſolute Miniſtry, and that therefore they ſhould reduce it to Aſhes, as Hezechiah did the Braſen ſerpent, as the occaſion of much evil and an object of Idolatry.

Pag. 22.

But ſeeing in ſo great a change they oppoſe the generall conſent of their Church, and that for one whom they pleaſe hereby, they offend more then a hundred. They labour to turne the eyes of the Ignorant people towards the Churches beyond the Seas, hoping,

as well they might, that looking so farre off they could not know what they did. The Authors of the Directory affirme, That by a long and sad experience they find that the English Liturgie is offensive to the forraigne Reformed Churches. And they adde a little after, That it is to answer the expectation of those Churches that they reject the ordinary Liturgie. Oh our good God, these persons do they meddle to preach the truth? Because that France and England are separated by sea and Language, do they think their people shall never be informed the truth of the opinion of their neighbours touching the English Liturgy, nor the manner of their practice in matter of their publique service? I hope they will leave to others the practice of this Maxime, Lye boldly, although you be refuted after, there will remain some impression upon the spirits of the hearers; And therefore we will believe charitably, that the most part of these Divines knew not what they said, but referred themselve: to the faith of others, and hoping that after they are better informed, they will change their opinion; we will say to them, as St Paul to the Galatians, I have confidence in Gal. 5. 10. you through the Lord; that ye will be none otherwise minded, but he that troubleth you, shall bear his Judgment whosoever he be. Since then they speak of their long experience, let us take it from the beginning, soon after the Ly-turgie was compiled, it was sent to good Calvin, who thus writ to the Protector of England,

England, as for the forme of prayers, and Ecclesiasticall ceremonies, I much approve that they should be established as a certain forme from which it may not be lawfull for the Pastors to go in the execution of their charge. Behold two points very contrary to the Covenanters, the one that he very well approves of the book of Common prayer, and the Ecclesiasticall ceremonies; the other that there ought to be a certain forme of Divine service, from which it should not be lawfull for the Pastors to digresse: Will they not say in reading these words of Calvin, Durus sermo, this is a hard saying who can heare it? What cruelty is this to undertake to bind the spirit of Zeale, and to dare to speak of a rule to them, who will stand fast in the liberty Christ hath made them free, and will not again be intangled in the yoke of bondage, for they make use of this text for that subject, we will leave them this text of Calvin to ruminate, and pray them not to begin the date of their long experience, till after his decease.

Martin Bucer will yet shorten it some years; Bucer he speaks thus to the Churches of England of scripta the forme of their Divine service, I give thanks to God who hath given you grace to receive these ceremonies in such a purity, for I have found nothing in it, which is not taken out of the word of God, or at least is not contrary to it, being rightly interpreted. P. 455.

That which the Directors and their party find most to be reprehended in this book, is of so small consideration with Beza, that he wrote thus to those who were so enraged

Beza ad against it, The surplice (saith he) is not a Quosdam thing of such importance that Ministers should be Anglicanū so scrupulous as to leave their function rather then Ecclesi- weare it, or that the people should forbear to feed
rum of the bread of life, rather then heare their Pastors fratres: preach who weare them. And as for receiving the blessed Sacrament of the Lords supper kneeling, Musick in Churches, and things of the like nature, he saith to them, that these are such small and indifferent things which should not much trouble them. Behold here their long experience much shortned, for its little above forty years since Beza died.

Gualter and Bullinger likewise commending the English Liturgie, condemned the affected tenderneſſe of some, who made use of it for a cloak of their sedition and Rebellion, speaking thus in an Epistle which they both joyntly wrote to their discontented brethren in England upon this subject, That if any of the people perswade themselves that these things smell of popery, let them learne to know the contrary, and let them be perfectly instructed, and that if the clamours of any of them raise up troubles
amongst the multitude, let them beware least in do- ing so, they draw upon your necks a more heavy yoake, and provoke not his Majestie, and bring not many Ministers into such dangers out of which they shall find no meanes to escape. This advertisement might well be turned into a Prophe-ſe, and these persons who falsly alledge the Reformed Churches are offended with the Ly-turgie of England, repent too soon that they had not followed their exhortations and submitted themselves,

Now

Now the King hath offered to exempt tender Consciences from the observation of certain things which offend them; yea to submit the whole Reformation to a lawfull Synod: But instead of receiving this Gracious offer of his Majesty, they persecute him and his Clergy with all violence, manifesting thereby that it is not our Reformation, but our destruction which is capable to content them, and these tender Consciences which tremble at the sight of a Surplice, or the sound of an Organ, are strong and lusty enough to commit Murder and Sacrilege; like the Pharisees, who strain'd at a Gnat and swallowed a Camel.

His Majesty made a Declaration to all the Reformed Churches, of the sincerity of his Profession, and Intention to live and die in the holy Religion which he had maintained, and because the Factious of his Kingdom, had used all their endeavours to alienate Forreign Churches from the Church of England upon the outward of Religion, his Majesty remembers them there how at the Synod of Dort both the Discipline and Lyturgy of England was approved by word and writing, by the most eminent Divines of Germany, France, Denmark, Sweden and Switzerland, as appears in the Acts of that Synod, and yet nevertheless, the Covenanters at this day, are so impudently bold, as to publish that by long and sad experience they have found that the English Lyturgy is offensive to the Forreign Reformed Churches. Where is their Honesty? Where is their Sincerity? Do they hope by these wicked

waies to draw down a blessing of God upon their Cause? The Truth which they pretend to advance, must it be established and set up by lying?

By all this then it appears that their long experience comes to nothing, but if they are wanting in the old experience, let them produce the new. Where are the Forreign Churches that require of them the abolition of the publick Service? Would they could cause them to speak for themselves: By Forreign Churches they cannot understand the Scottish Church; for since the beginning of this war, the Covenanters would not acknowledge them for strangers, for fear of being reproached for inviting and bringing in Forreign Forces, and keeping them under pay in the Kingdom. And as for other Churches, we account the experience of the Authors of the Directory do not much exceed ours: Now we have not known any Protestant Stranger, ever made it any difficultie to joyn in the publick prayers of the Church of England, except some walking Anabaptists, as in London they have lately made to appear; and neither in France nor the Low Countries, we never knew or understood the least trace of dissention hereupon, and if the Fashion of some particulars amongst us displease other Churches, they do not lesse displease ours.

The Reformed Churches are better instructed, than lightly to quarrel at the exterior Circumstance of Divine Service, where the substance is whole and sound; they have learned to speak after Calvin, in the Confession presented

Presented in the Name of the Churches of Confessio
 France to the Emperour and Princes of Ger- Ecclesiastū
 many, We acknowledge that all and every Church Gallicarū have this right to make Laws and statutes, and inter opus- for to establish a common Policy amongst them, cula Cal- provided that all things be done in the House of vin.
 God decently and in order, and they owe obedience to these Statutes, so that they do not intrall the Conscience, nor impose Superstition, and those that refuse this are accounted by us seditious and wilful.

Beza goes yet a little further, and main- In his E- taines that in the outward of Religion, Many pistle be- things may, yea ought to be torn, notwithstanding fore al- they are not justly commanded. ledged.

St. Augustin hath an Epistle upon this subject, which is a Golden Epistle, wherein he in- Tom. 2. E- structs Januarius of the indifferencie of Eccle- pist. ad
 siastical observations, as of the times of Fast- Januariū
 ing, and the divers customs of receiving the Blessed Sacrament of the Lords Supper. All things of this kind (saith he) have their Observations free, and for this there is no better of Discipline for a grave and prudent Christian, then to do as he seeth them do in all the Churches whither he goes, for that which is neither against Faith and good manners ought to be held indifferent, and ought to be observed according to the company with whom we live and converse; and hereupon he reports how his Mother being come to Millan found her self in great perplexity, because they did not fast on the Saturday, as they did in the Church from whence she came, and he to resolve her, went to ask counsel of St. Ambrose Arch-Bishop of Millan, who answered him

him; When I (saith he) go to Rome, I fast on the Saturday, when I am here I Fast not on that day, do ye the same: Into whatsoever Church ye go, observe their customs; if you your self will not give offence to persons, and will that no person should give you offence. All Protestants of Europe except the Faction of the Covenant, Govern themselves thus, in whatsoever place they are, they joyn with the Reformed Church, whatsoever their form of Discipline be, which (as some say) is divers in all Nations.

To this Grave Counsel of S<sup>r</sup> Ambr. S<sup>r</sup> Aust. adds a Character to the life of the imperious & scrupulous humour of our melancholy zealots, whom one would think had an intention to paint them out: I have oft perceived (saith he) with much grief and sorrow, that many weak and infirm persons have been much troubled through their Contentions, wilfulnesse and superstitious fearfulnessse at some of their Brethren, for doing some things which could not be certainly defined by the Authority of the holy Scriptures, nor by the tradition of the universal Church, nor by the utility that might thereby come for the bettering and amendment of our lives; only because there is some matter for their conceptions to reason and discourse upon, or because they think the farther they go, or are able to separate themselves from the Customs received, is the most exquisite and nearest to perfection, moving such litigious and idle Questions, that they make appear to all, that they will never allow of any thing well done unlesse they do it themselves.

this Liberty, that every one form an outward order of Divine Service according to their prudence, and its more to be wished than expected, that there should be one and the same order throughout all Churches. But I know not any Church that reject and cast off all certain Forms as the Covenanters. The Declaration following made some few years since, by persons of account in the Churches of France, is notable.

As for the Ceremonies and Customs of Ecclesiastical Service and Discipline, we judge convenient to leave to every Church his own, without altering or changing any thing. One day when it shall please God to perfect and confirm amity amongst these Churches, we may be able by an universal council and consent, to form a certain Liturgy which may be as a Symbole and Bond of Concord. The Churches of the Covenanters ought to be exempted out of this Number, for the Liturgy is become to them an Apple of Discord, which hath made them quarrel with all Churches of the world; being in this point like unto Eſau, whose hands were against every one, and every ones hands against him. Therefore the Directours refuse themselves by a manifest contradiction, then when by their publick Declaration they tell the people, that it is to conform themselves to the Reformed Churches that they prescribe not an ordinary Form of publick Prayers and Administration of the Sacraments. Seeing that it is a thing most notoriously known that all the Reformed Churches have certain Forms of Prayers: But they do as if they should should apparel themselves with Green and Yellow, because the Ministers of France apparel themselves with black, 'Tis the Doctrine of the Brownists, which now predominate in England, that for to have a Lyturgy or Form of Prayers is to have another Gospel: Now after all this, Do they not well, think you, to Court the Churches of France, and to make a great noise of their Conformity with them, having so openly condemned them? And their phanaticall Phrensie in this point is proceeded so far, that neither the Lords Prayer, nor the Ten Commandements, nor the Apostles Creed, are repeated in their Churches, nor are taught their Children in their Houses; much lesse any Form of Catechism: Behold here a Faction who reject the Books of Christian Religion: An horrible and unheard of thing in all ages and in all Churches since Christianity entred the world. And dare these people speak of Reformation and Conformity with the Reformed Churches?

CHAP. XVI.

Of the great prudence and wisdom of the first English Reformers and of the foolishness of these at present.

IF these Directors, who boast themselves of a new Light, had had at least the light of Prudence, they would have considered that they had to deal with popular Spirits, who were accustomed to a good and holy Lyturgie, but since on a suddain interdicted the use, they could not but think they were suddenly transported into another Gospel, for the people are dull, and fastened upon the exteriour, and that if they be once fastened to a form of Devotion which is good, although below perfection, there is occasion to praise God, that the people have any tast of Devotion, even in any Form, and it should be cherished and encouraged. And if there be any thing in this form to be amended, it should be done so mildly and dexterously, that the people be not exasperated, and the change made in the outward skin of Religion, make not the substance distastd; For the most part mens spirits penetrates not much further then the superficies, as indeed, no further did theirs who came to reform us with the sword. It's a very dangerous thing to overthrow an Order wherein the Devotion of the people hath taken root. For besides the disorder that follows

lows commonly in the Church and State, they shall find that in transplanting Devotion into a new soil, they cause it to die; Some being Prophane, others Desperate and Atheisticall.

For an exemplary Conduct of Christian Prudence in this great point of publick Reformation, all after Ages will admire the English Reformers under the Reign of Edward the Sixth, who intrapt the people, as Saint Paul beguiled the Corinthians, who confessed that being subtile he caught them by guile, for to establish the Doctrine, so as it is contained in the Confession of Faith in English Church, and agrees with that of other Reformed Churches, they kept themselves from going openly and suddenly against the inclination of the People, above all in the exterior, which although it is of less importance, hath notwithstanding a very strong influence upon the common People. After the Reformation was concluded upon by the Prelates and Nobles, Mattins were said in the Cathedral Churches at their accustomed hours, with the same Garments they were wont to wear, and the same ordinary singing, but the Hymnes and Psalmes they read in English, and their Scriptures were not read in pieces, but by whole Chapters, and Prayers were put to God onely in the Name of Jesus Christ, and in a known tongue; a thing which did much content the People, and much edifie them, and being accustomed to these things they passed by the Masse. Sermons became more frequent, simply instructing the People in the Truth

Truth and holinesse without any bitternesse or contest; whereby they gained the spirits of the People by Charity, which is the onely Method for to decide Controversies, and in a short time, that which superstition had drawn over the service of God, was insensibly abolished, and there was a generall Conversion of the Kingdome wrought without any noise.

This prudent way wrought better effects then all the combates of Religion, whether fought by Armies or Letters which have been since above these hundred years; Their Enemies of the Church of Rome would much rather the Reformers had disputed concerning the Doctrine and Discipline, and that they had set upon them with their utmost strength.

Our Melancholy and peevish Zelots would have done no great good upon them by the wayes they now take, if this task had fallen into their hands; for such a great work there was need of better notions of piety and prudence then the fundamentall maximes of the Reformation at present, That the purest Religion is that which hath least conformity with the Church of Rome. That for to do well, they must do quite contrary to that which the Church of Rome doth, and hereby they make all that remains of the Institution of the Apostles to become Antichristian, because the Papist hath practized them. Maximes which are onely proper for poor seditious Spirits, whose nature is like the Crabfishes, who know not how to go but backward. Religion con-sits not in negation, the saving truths are affirmative, and it would be a dangerous rule to believe altogether contrary to that which the devil believes, which would oblige us to deny the Divinity.

For so high an enterprize, which is equally as necessary as dangerous, there is required clear seeing judgements, firm and stable, ready and charitable; who are able to penetrate and dive into the inside of Religion, and discern the meat from the shell; who without bending the Truth to the times, know how to accommodate their work to the nature of men and affaires; and who have the discretion recommended by S. Paul, Prove all things, hold fast that which is good, wisely distinguishing betwixt the Apostolicall Institution, and the rust that is grown on it through length of time.

These excellent persons manifest to the world that they well understood this secret, that the matter of Religion is a thing rather adored then known by the people; but the Form and Ceremony is that their eyes are fixed upon, and which fills their spirits, and he that pleaseth them in the exterior, shall easily prevail with them for the inward of Doctrine.

Now it appears that Superstition is alwayes of the same Nature, although she changeth her object, for the Fanaticall zeal of the people of the Covenant being fleshed and egged on to destroy the exterior Order, perceived not in the mean while that they undermined the foundations of Faith; For we find amongst

mongst our enemies, many different Sects; Some denying the Trinity, the Incarnation of the Son of God, and his Divinity, who nevertheless agree altogether to hate and abolish our Lyturgie with the sword, without contending amongst themselves for these Essential differences; neither are they moved for these monstrous errors, which directly oppose the glory of God and salvation of men; so much are men for the most part children; yea brutish in matters of Piety, fastening themselves upon appearances, and not upon things, considering more the garment than the body of Religion.

The vulgar being every where of this disposition, God shewed great favour to the ignorant people in times of our Fathers to put them into so good hands, who knew how to lead them mildly to the Truth, without exasperating them for the discipline. For to provoke and irritate them, was not the means to instruct them.

Let all the world judge if the Reformers at present follow this example, and whether they search to instruct, or to provoke the people; For after we have made the best and soundest party amongst them, to confesse that the Doctrine of the Church of England was good and holy, and they be demanded hereupon, why they persecute the King, and his People with such rage? They pay us with this miserable reason, that the people are affectionate to certain things as necessary, which are not necessary, and they would wear them from this opinion: And must they for this drown three famous Kingdoms in bloud, and snatch the Crown from off the head, and the Sword out of the hand of a good King?

We may well tell them that they undertake an impossible thing; for there is no Religion, no Nation, nor almost person, who is not lodged there; but they themselves, are they not more superstitious in this point, then those whom they would correct? For what greater superstition for to make a necessity, to contradict and oppose things, where there is no necessity, yea to account the abolishing of things not necessary, so necessary, that for it they will massacre the King, and bathe themselves in the bloud of the Church and State. Can there be in the world a more pernicious superstition? No verily, if they consider that this superstition kills the soul as well as the body. For those from whom they take the use of their holy prayers, have great cause to fear they will also take from them their Religion, whereupon some have fallen into a desperate Melancholy; if they deal thus with us, because they have a greater measure of light then we, it is much to be desired that they had a little more; That they fall not into the offence condemned by S. Paul, and through thy knowledge shall thy weak brother perish for whom Christ died, but when ye sin against the Brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

Heretofore this faction would be spar'd in their disobedience to the Ecclesiastical Laws, pretending tenderness, & weakness of Conscience; but now that they are become Masters of the Laws, they

they regard not our weaknesse, but force us to follow their fantasies, without considering our doubts and scruples. The King by the articles of Uxbridge, offered them Liberty of Conscience, but they will not give neither the King nor his subjects the like liberty; Either take the Covenant or leave your Benefice, was the choice they gave many Ministers.

Alledge to them the great and deep affliction of the people, because they had taken from them their Common Prayers, their Forms for the celebration of the Sacraments, & of Marriage, their Customs of receiving the Sacrament at Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost, and the decent manner of burying their dead, with some Prayers and Texts of Scripture, which put the living in mind of their mortality, and raised up in them an assurance of their resurrection. They will answer you, that these observations are not necessary, and mock at the affliction of the ignorant People; But we hold that it is necessary to obey God, who bath commanded us to do nothing whereby thy weak brother stumbleth, is offended, or made weak, but be such as give none offence, neither to the Jew, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God. Also the imaginary danger which they fear of things that may come to passe, is a thousand times lesse, then the present scandal, and offence done to pious souls, to behold all Ecclesiasticall order overthrown, and Liberty given to prophane and fanaticque Spirits, to whom any thing is permitted, unlesse to obey the King and the Orders established by lawfull Authority.

But let us passe to other offences: There are many more besides the violation of Orders, the very substance of Religion is endamaged, What care do many people take to Baptize their Children? How do they reprove them that Baptize no more in the Name of the Father, the Son, and holy the Ghost? Is it not permitted to every one to Baptize or not Baptize their Children? and Baptisme is it not refused to many Infants, which are presented to be Baptized?

These new Reformers find so many difficulties in the capacity of their Parents, that they are constrained many times to carry their Children far from their dwellings to be received into the Christian Church; for tis one of the errours of the Times, that if the Father hath not Faith, (that is to say a Faith after their mode) the Infant must not be Baptized; In stead whereof the Reformed Churches in Baptizing Infants, consider not the Faith of the Parents, but of the Church in which they are born; And the Doctrine, not according as it is believed, but according as it is taught, Fidem non subjectivam sed objectivam. For if they must be certain whether the Father hath Faith, they should also be certain that he is the Father of the Infant, which the Charity of the Church questioneth not.

Also it is an ordinary custome amongst them to rebaptize aged persons, and to plunge women naked into the Water untill they say they feel Faith.

The abuse of the Blessed Sacrament of the Lords Supper is yet worse, because it is more uni-universall, and maintained by the body of their Divines. We beseech all lovers of the Christian Religion to enquire themselves of these Ministers, how long time they have forborn to receive or administer this holy Sacrament? when was it that the heads of the Covenanters received it? when is it that their Souldiers were partakers of it, those zealous Murtherers, whose assassinations and plunderings are steeped in Piety? Is it because they dare not receive the body and bloud of our Lord, with hands defiled with rapine and innocent bloud? But this reason cannot serve for the Churches, where the Ministers are laid hold on and forbidden to administer the Sacrament where they are Ministers. How many Churches are there where there hath been no speaking of a Sacrament these fifteen or sixteen years? And is it not for them to mock God to make a Directory of the manner of receiving the Lords Supper, and not to make use of it, yea by force to hinder execution and performance of it?

Our Lord Jesus hath commanded us, To do this in remembrance of him, but behold here persons, who impose a necessity not to do, because they know not those who are worthy, and therefore they hinder others to obey Jesus Christ, taking by force the bread and wine from the people, who were assembled to Communicate, and carried away the Minister out of the Church for fear he should Administer the Sacrament. These actions cry to heaven and will one day draw down a just vengeance. These proceedings make us fear, least they rank the Lords supper amongst the superannuated Ceremonies which must be abolished, for in many Churches where the Covenanters are it's not used, which is a horrible thing to hear; the Church of God, since Christs time, never before brought forth such examples.

Certainly since Jesus Christ would, that we should do this in remembrance of him, untill his coming again; if he should come now, he would find it very strange, that they had left before his coming this celebration of the memory of his death, which he had so expressly commanded, and it is to be presumed that he will receive no reason against his Command: for the coming of Jesus Christ is the only reason which ought to make this holy Ordinance cease.

By this Scruple, that they dare not administer the holy Supper, but to those alone whom they know to be worthy (which is the general pretext of their Party for their totall abstinence) they condemn not only the Reformed Churches, who exclude none from the holy Communion, unlesse they be ignorant and scandalous persons, but also Jesus Christ, who administered to the Disciple that betrayed him; even then when he was plotting his treason in his heart.

By this also they even bind themselves not to celebrate the Supper of the Lord until they be inspectors and lookers into Conscience, that is to say, Gods: For otherwise they cannot be fully satisfied of the worthinesse of person, and all those who have a holy desire to partake partake of the Lords Table, shall not be admitted, until these principal Clerks of the Councel-Chamber of God have formed a Church, which consists purely of Elect.

Its great pity when men will be too wise, and introduce Laws of Severity into the Church which God hath not required at our hands: These men should meditate on the Text of Solomon, Eccles. 7. 16. Be not righteous overmuch, neither make thy self overwise, why shouldest thou destroy thy self? Or otherwise, why shouldest thou draw desolation on thy self? Thus the Pharisees by an impertinent wisdom and affected Authority, and a sublime Divinity of Chymeras, were confounded in the vanity of their understandings, and drew desolation upon themselves and their Church.

But yet there is a Mystery of Iniquity under this scruple, which doth deeply stain the Divines of the Covenant; for their Masters foment them for to advance their affairs, and it is easie to see, that if they once become the strongest, they will exclude from the Sacrament of the Lords Supper all those who cannot banish from their heart the love of their King and the Church wherein they were born and brought up: In a Sermon preached before the House of Commons, and printed by command, we learn that their Party will no more communicate with the Antichristian Faction; the Preacher explains himself, and tells us he means all those that adhear to the King in this quarrel: They have many times preached that none should receive the Lords Supper, but those who had taken the Covenant; yea, they

they have spoke aloud, that the Oath of the Covenant, and the Lords Supper should be administered together, so that the Communicants must swear upon the Body and Blood of our Lord, and upon the hope of their salvation, that they would be Rebels to their King as long as they live; and the Blood of Jesus Christ must be employed for the same use, the Cup of mans Blood which the Confederates with Cataline drunk round one to another, in taking the Oath of Conjurati<sup>o</sup>n to murder their Superiours and ruine their Countrey. But this design is not yet ripe for execution, they defer it for a time: In the mean time, these Gentlemen and the spiritual Fathers denie themselves the Seal of their Union with Jesus Christ, and hereafter they will dispose of this Sacrament according as the necessity of the Covenanters do require. They forgot to put down this Article of their reservation in the Epistle they sent to Forreign Churches, but in inviting them in general to conform themselves unto them, they exhort them to this amongst the rest. What? Must the Reformed Churches then abstain from the Lords Supper, and choose to interdict the Ordinance of Jesus Christ, rather than put themselves in danger of administering to the unworthy? Must the universal Christian Church be gulled by their Scruples, composed of the folly of some, and the malice of others? Must all Believers in the world hold their Faith in suspense, and deprive themselves of the Sacrament of their union with Jesus Christ, untill the Covenanters of England have found found a proper time to make use of the Body and Blood of Christ, to bind together a wicked Faction, and have made the Mysteries of Salvation their footstool for Ambition.

Rather than suffer by a criminall complacencie, that Religion should be so destroyed, and that these horrible things should passe for Doctrines of the Reformed Churches, let all those who beare this title, defend the honour of the Gospel, and thereby a publique detestation of so great a corruption. Let all those who love God testifie by a just Anger they hate the evil. It matters not what Fraternity these innovators pretend with other Churches, if they corrupt the Christian Religion, and invite them to do the like, Familiaris accipere haud familiariter, let them manifest, they have no fraternity with heresy, and impiety, repulse boldly the temptation of those who invite so basely to do ill, that they may have no more courage to return.

But there is one consideration which should mitigate your indignation against them. That amongst this most impious extravagancie, there is a malady and disease of the spirit, for many of this party have their braynes dislocated and displaced. Some whereof have taken their children, and gone and sacrificed them, pretending a particular command, like that God gave to Abraham; others have shut themselves up with a Bible, and resolved to eate nothing because its written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Some have killed their Cat, because she had taken a mouse mouse on Sunday, but defer'd the execution until Munday. And there are women & Tradesmen amongst them, who preach by the spirit without call, knowledge, or premeditation, others who account the receiving of the Sacrament on their knees, is to communicate at Masse, and that the surplice is the smock of the whore of Babylon, the publique prayers Masse refined, the sound of the Organs, the Hoboyes of Anti-Christ; ye need not wonder the Covenanters have so great a party, since fools and Ideots are one their side.

The like weaknesse is seen in the Epistle of the Assembly to the Reformed Churches, they highly aggravate the persecutions prepared for all those who would not bear the mark of the beast, meaning by this marke, their obedience to the order of Episcopacy, and the use of the publique service, for the King required no other thing of them; but as beasts which being cast into the river, ordinarily swim against the Stream, so many of these brutish spirits, think they can never be saved, but in going against the Antient received customs, how good so ever they be, and make all their piety and honesty to consist in a fullen and dogged devotion, fantastickall and turbulent, which will give no rest to themselves, nor others.

This scrupulous humour hath produced strange effects, witnes he that kiled his mother and brother in cold blood, having no other quarrel against them, but that they loved the Liturgie. This was a preamble of the devil, who the year after began this war for the same subject, in which he made use of the Melancholy humour of the people to cut the throats of their brethren for devotion, according to the instructions before alledged out of Sions Plea, and the Souldiers Catechisme.

In effect their spirit of contradiction, and their bloody inclination, which hath formed this maxime of the times, that the Reformation must be made by blood, are the productions of a sharp choler, predominant in the Hippocondres or bowels, whose vapours besiege the animall spirits, which carries them into a savage rage, which hath something of the nature of the Licanthropie.

There is alwaies in the worst parties excellent natures, which are carried away with the stream, and we know amongst the party of the Covenant, some very brave men; but the churlish zealots, whose fierceness and number Govern even the Governours themselves, are of weak and malignant spirits, whose temper is like that of Tiberius, that is of dung kneaded and wrought together with blood, these are men of sad sordid, and reserved natures, which a wild melancholy renders fearfull, superstitious, suspicious and cruel; and when all these ingredients meet together, ignorance, superstition, presumption and willfullness, and a flitting and imperious humour, all steeped in a black and hot Melancholy, they make the most malignant composition of the world, pernicious to Church and State, to families and all societies, causing every where ruine and combustion,

Hitherto we have found no ſuch conſormitie as might induce the Covenanters of England to invite the Reformed Churches to eſpouſe their quarrel, for they every where carefully Adminiſter the Lords Supper, they take order that Infants be Baptized, they ſuffer none to be rebaptized, they ſuppreſſe heresies, ſcandalls, the liberty of Fanatique ſpirits, they repeat to the people the ten Commandements of God, the Articles of the Chriſtian faith, they make uſe of certain formes of prayer in Adminiſtring the Sacraments, and other parts of the Divine ſervice. They teach the people to ſubmit to every ordinance of man for the Lords ſake, and not to reſiſt ſupream powers, but to ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake; they are free from a capricious weakneſſe in matters of indifferency which are peculiar to our enemies; alſo theſe Churches

Churches approve of the English Liturgie, and without scruple joyn with it in prayer when occasion serves, what is there then which should oblige them to associate together. The Reformed Churches, say they, have no Bishops, but we demand of them, whether all those Churches which have Bishops are not Reformed? They incline doubtlesse to this opinion, for in the title of their Epistle to the Reformed Churches, they name but those of France the Low Countries, and Switzerland, they let the other passe under an &c. If that be their opinion, they have much forgot themselves in their Copies which they sent to particular States, for they writ to the Churches of Hesse and those of Anhalt, which are governed by superintendents, that is to say in our Language Bishops.

In all those Countries subject to the Crownes of Denmark and Sweeden, The Episcopall degree is kept; So almost through all Germany, this degree is preserved under the name of superintendent, and in some places (as in Brene) the name of Bishops remain, although part of these Churches be Lutherans, we will not refuse them the name of Reformed, there wanting but a little charity in them, to make both them and us to accord. So likewise in the large Territories of Bohemia, Polonia, and Transylvania, the Evangelicall Churches are Governed by Seniors, (as they call them) who have Episcopall power.

They should not then boast of the consent of the Reformed Churches, nor complain to them, them, that the King would not admit a Reformation, which pretends to abolish the Episcopall degree as an appurtenance of Anti-Christ, which is in effect to condemne all Churches where there is any preheminance amongst the Clergy. I forbear to speak of the Churches of Russia, Grecia, and India, and of the rest of the world, whose Doctrine is lesse known to us then the point of their discipline, which are all Governed by Bishops.

But the Covenanters Magisterially prescribe their discipline to all the world, although they themselves have none, vaunting themselves of a piety without pair, and yet will not leave to other Churches any liberty. Therefore their Declarations give all to understand, that after they have planted it in England, they will go and do as much beyond the Seas. The Donatists shut up the Church within the confines of Affrica, which then was a small thing, unfitly applying that text of the Canticles, Tell us where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flocks to rest at noon, but the French translation readeth, to rest towards the south. At present the Kingdome of Jesus Christ is in danger to be confined within England, whither other Nations must come and search it, saying, tell us where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flocks to rest towards the North.

It's easie to make the consent of the Churches named in the title of the Epistle to sound high, because they have no Bishops, but to prove their agreement with the Covenanters

nanters in this point, they should do well to make these two things to appear, the one that these Churches condemn the Episcopall order as unlawfull and Antichristian, the other that these Churches do conform to the discipline of the Covenanters, things which they will find false.

As for the first we see not that the other Churches quarrel at the Church of England hereupon, but pray God to blesse them in the order, against this it matters not to alledge the thirtieth Article of the Churches of France Confession of faith. We believe that all true Pastors in what place soever they be, have the same Authority and equall power, under one head Jesus Christ, and that for this cause no Church ought to pretend any dominion or Lordship over the other.

He that speaks for the General, expounds this Article, Ye must know (saith he) that the equality of Pastors in that which is of Authority to declare the Gospel, and administer the Sacraments, and for the use of the keyes is held necessary amongst all; For Baptism the Lords Supper, and the declaring of the Remission of sins is of equal dignity in the mouth of Pastors, whether they be of great or little Authority. But as for Ecclesiasticall policy, we do not hold the equality of Pastors absolutely necessary, we do not account this order a point of faith, nor a Doctrine of salvation, we live (God be thanked) in brotherly Concord with our neighbour Churches, which follow another form, and where the Bishops have superiarity.

Buckler
of faith,
Sect. 124.

In his disputations of Divinity in the University of Sedam, this is one of his Theses,

We maintain that the Bishops of England after their conversion to the faith, and their Abjuration of Papistry were faithfull servants of God, and ought not to forsake, neither the name nor title of Bishops.

Calvin himself spake as much before in his Epistle to Cardinall Sadolet, speaking of the Church of Rome; Let them (saith he) establish such an Hierarchy, where the Bishops having the dignity, refuse not to submit themselves to Christ, and depend of him as their onely head, and referre themselves to him, and let them maintain amongst them such a brotherly society, which is not entertained but by the bond of truth. Then if there be found any persons who refuse to respect such an Hierarchy with reverence and Sovereign obedience, I acknowledge and confesse him worthy of all sorts of Anathemas.

This passage serves for the Episcopall degree in generall: This other of Jacobus Lectius Professor at Geneva hath a singular regard to the Bishops of England, he saith that those Bishops onely were true and lawfull Bishops, and such as Saint Paul writes of in his Epistles to Timothy and Titus, and we deny not (saith he) but there hath been formerly such Bishops, and that there are some now, and that they elect such now in the Kingdome of England.

Beza writes thus to Arch-Bishop Whitgift, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, In my writings touching the Ecclesiasticall Government, I have ever opposed the Romane Hierarchy, but it was never in my intencion to oppose the Ecclesiasticall policy of your English Church, nor to require of

you

you to forme your Church according to the patterne of our Presbyterian discipline, for whilst the substance of your Doctrine is uniforme with the Church of Christ, it is lawfull for us to differ in other matters, according as the circumstances of times, places and persons require, and is avowed by the prescription of antiquity; and for this effect, I desire and hope that the sacred and holy society of your Bishops will continue, and maintaine for ever, their right and title in the Government of the Church, with all Christian equity and moderation. Moreover the Churches yea the English Bishops render to their brethren beyound the seas the like charity: Thus speaks Famous and Reverend Bishop Hall, I most Cordially respect, and with me our Church their dear sister, those excellent forraign Churches, who have chosen, and followed, an outward forme of Government, which in every respect is most expedient, and sutable for their condition.

In his Treatise
of Episcopacy.

With the like charity, an excellent Bishop whose title of his book being without name, binds us not to name him: Having proved that according to the antient institution of the Christian Church, the Bishops alwaies gave the imposition, or laying on of hands. I write not here (saith he) to prejudice our neighbour Churches, I dare not limit the extraordinary working and operation of the holy Ghost, there where the ordinary meanes is wanting, without the fault of the persons, God gave his people Manna so long as they were in the wilderness, necessity is a strong pleader, many reformed Churches live under Kings and Bishops of another

III.

Communion ; Others have particular reasons, why they could not continue nor introduce Bishops, but it is not so amongst us, speaking of the Church of his own Country.

A few lines after he adds, As for my self I am very much inclined to believe, that the Lord looks upon his people with pity in all their prejudices, and that there is a great Latitude left to particular Churches in the constitution of their Ecclesiastical government, according to the exigence of place and persons, provided that the divine Order and institution be observed.

Now after these charitable Judgements, the Reformed Churches do not believe, that which the Epistle of the Assembly of Divines would perswade them; that the Bishops hate forraign Churches and teach that without Bishops they could have no Church nor lawfull Call of Ministers, so that if any of ours have offended of late the Reformed Church in the point of Discipline, they are disavowed in it by their Bishops.

Here is, thanks be to God, a Christian Harmony, the Churches which have no Bishops say, Let them that would and can enjoy the Order of Episcopacy, let them enjoy it, far be it from us that we should either proudly or rashly reprove them for it. The Bishops respect cordially the Forraign Churches, which have not the same Order, and account the Government established amongst them, in all respects, the most expedient for them. Let both the one and the other hold themselves there, and let them grant one another the Liberty to govern in the outward, according to prudence and exigencies ; and let them joyn brotherly together to maintaine the substance of Religion constant and uncorrupted.

It is the counsel of the Reverend Bishop before alledged, There are some Plants (saith Serpent he) which thrive best in the shadow, if then this salve. form of government without Bishops, agree best to pag 215. the constitution of some Common-wealths, we pray to God to give them joy in it, and pray them to say as much for us. Petimus damusque vicissim. This is spoken Christianly and wisely, if our enemies had the charity to have said so much, there would have been no Covenant, neither would they have pulled down Monarchy, for to pull down Bishops, under colour of pulling down the Kingdome of Anti-Christ : But if they would that in this Quarrel the Reformed Churches should joyn with them, they should first have drawn from them a declaration, that they held the Episcopall degree unlawfull, and a mark of Antichrist, and incompatible with the Gospel ; and that rather then suffer it, they should overthrow the State, and dispossesse your Kings ; For lesse then this perswasion could not induce the Reformed Churches to espouse the quarrel of the Covenant.

We will proceed no further in this Controversie, only because the Covenanters build their Rules of Reformation upon the example of the French Churches, which the French Reformers never thought of, we beseech all equall persons to consider the Christian prudence of those that put their hand to this great work in France, having the Court and Clergy contrary to them.

The best that they were able to do in the matter of Discipline, was to provide Pastors who should teach purely, and leave them in a simple equality, there being no question of governing in times of persecution, but to instruct and suffer, and it being a thing subject to danger and envy, to erect new degrees, which could not be done without quarreling at them which were established.

Necessity contributes to prudence, for the Reformation in France having begun by the Common People, and some few of the inferior Clergy, who were opposed by the Civil and Ecclesiasticall Power, we cannot wonder, if the Government which they established according to the time, was popular; if the Reformation had begun by Bishops, the Government had been Episcopal; The Priests that were Converted had not power to convert their Bishops: As the English, who began the Reformation, helped by their Authority, the Conversion of their Clergy and People. For the Inferiour Orbes, having a contrary motion to the Superiour, have not the power to make them follow their course. But the superiour Orbes carry along with them the Inferiour; It was a great matter that the Reformed people could gaine any retrogration against the Rapidity and swiftnesse of the greater Sphears.

The Discipline of the French Churches is most Commodious to their present Estate, and hardly could there be found a more proper for a Church that lives under Magistrates of a contrary trary Religion, in expectation of the Reformation of them who possesse the Ecclesiasticall degrees. The French Ministers in this humble and equall order keep themselves in a state of obedience proper to submit themselves to their Diocesans when it shall please God to Convert them, and we believe that their Fathers did choose this equality, not as an opposition to the degrees of the Clergy, but as a way to dispose them & as a plank ready to invite the Bishops to passe over to their Reformation.

But if the Churches of France should come to maintaine this Doctrine of the Covenanters, that the Order of Episcopacy, is an apurtenance of Antichrist, and that there is no Kingdome of Jesus Christ, but there where the Ministers are equal and poor; This would put the Conversion of the French Churches out of all hope. But for as much as we desire the advancement of the Gospel, we keep our selves from re-inforcing the Considerations of flesh and blood or from augmenting the reproach of the Gospel; we are not offended at the Degrees, nor Revenues of the Clergy; we render not the entrance into the Church more thorny then it is: For to preach Reformation to a Clergy of a divers Religion, and bind them to degrade and strip themselves for to Reform them; what other thing is this, but at once to call them & to shut the door against them? It's true, that notwithstanding all earthly considerations, God may do miracles for to Convert them, but that hinders not but that we should carry our selves prudently to invite them, and we ought not of deliberate purpose to make new Barracadoes between them and us, because God can, if he please, break them.

But to the end that the difference of Disciplines move no quarrel amongst the Reformed Churches; this truth ought wisely to be considered, That there is no entire Rule of Discipline layd down in Scripture; and that not to have an outward order in the Church, all the parts whereof not being expressly set down in the Word of God, is to involve themselves in great difficulties, and shut themselves up into straight bounds, it's to search that in the Word of God, which is not there to be found. Let all things be done decently and in order. Its a Scripture that may be stretched very far, and which remits to the Christian prudence of the Ministers of the Word of God, to advise of such an order which is most expedient for the times and places wherein they live; provided that nothing be done against Divine Institution.

It's then necessary that to the Divine Institution the humane should be joyned, and it was never otherwise in Church: Now that which is humane in the Discipline, can never be so well united and fitted with the Divine, that there may be made of these two, a Form entirely regular, and a perfect composition; It's like the iron and clay in the feet of the Statue of Nebuchadnezzar which could never well joyn themselves one with another, for the Ecclesiastical Ordinances are the feet of Religion, bearing on them a head of gold, and a breast of silver, that is striving to up-

uphold a Doctrine of great price? but they themselves touch the earth, and are mingled, and there is not such a prudence and sanctity of Reformation, which can form a Discipline purely celestial, nor joyned that which it hath of humane and Divine in it with such a justnesse, as to compose a perfect Order, with materialls of so different a Nature.

This here is the cause of so many faults which may be found in all Ecclesiasticall Order. For notwithstanding the confusion of Schismes and Heresies, the sharpnesse of Persecutions, the infinite revolutions of States, during sixteen Ages, a pure and divine Doctrine remains in the World, as gold which is found always at the bottom of the Furnace; The same cannot be said of the Discipline, for that is defective in all Churches and varieth, yea ought to vary according to the Times and Places, and it hath so much of man in it, that what it hath of Divine, is alwaies more or lesse Sophisticated by humane inventions; and will be alwaies so, untill Jesus Christ hath withdrawn his Church from the Earth, and raised it to that great Ecclesiasticall Government, which is the Rule of Heaven.

Surely though there be certaine Rules of Discipline Divine and certaine, there yet remaines ever something for Prudence to Form, which ought to accomodate it self to Necessity; So bending according as Occasions serve, the Rules that God hath left, to the wisdom of men, as the Divine be not damnified, and that the Government of the Church thwarts not that of the State, which is our misery at this day.

Whosoever shall consider the Kingdoms and Common-wealths of Christendome, shall find that every where the Religion of the State hath a Discipline suitable to the Civil Government, the Church taking hold of the State, as the Ivie that groweth about a Tree: But the Covenanters pretend the quite contrary, labouring to Form the State to their new pattern of Ecclesiasticall Discipline. Hither tended the Petition of the Rabble of London, to the House of Commons; which was after by the same House in a Body, presented to the House of Lords; Wherein they required an equality in the State, that thereby there might be one in the Church. An action which will leave for ever to Posterity, an infamous and true Character of the Intentions of the Covenanters: But in this they have but followed the Doctrine of their Sect. Cartwright had taught them before, as the Tapestries or Hangings are fitted to the House, so the Common-wealth ought to be fitted and accommodated to the Church, and the Government of the State to the Ecclesiasticall Government. This designe is wholly void of all Prudence and possibility, and being ruinous to the State, must of necessity be the ruine of it self.

Reply to
pag. 181.

It's certaine that the Doctrine of Religion must not be accommodated to the State, but that which is humane in the Discipline, ought to be subject to humane Lawes, and the Authority of the Magistrate, since God demands it of us, Submit your selves to every Ordinance of man for the Lords sake; But these men make no difference between the Doctrine and the Discipline, and would perswade us, that they have a whole Body of Discipline altogether Divine, and which is even the substance of the Gospel; without which there is no true Religion, but it is that we cannot find in the Gospel, but in Cartwright, 247. stead of that, they prove it by the sword.

CHAP. XVIII.

There is another point which the Covenanters ought to prove, before they associate themselves with the Churches of France in matter of Discipline.

They must prove that they have an Ecclesiasticall Discipline like unto theirs; For all Churches which had no Bishops, have not for all that the same Discipline. As for the Discipline of the Covenanters, they need make none by theirs, nor receive any from them, for they have none at all, and they take the way never to have any. If the Menaces of the Scotch Army, cause them to make an Ordinance in favour of the Presbytery, they make presently an honourable reparation to the Independants; And much of their Prudence lies in this, to accord all to the different Parties, but give them nothing, in making use of the service of the divers Sects of Religion, they take no care of their Order but of their Liberty to convert all; which will one day turn to their Ruine, and Confusion, when they shall have no enemy to unite them. But in the mean while Religion is destroyed, and all the world behold with astonishment that the English Reformers have left the Church without without any Discipline, now these many years; they have done much worse then he who began to build, but was not able to finish, for these have overthrown the antient order, without ever considering what they would build in the place, and yet they are not agreed thereupon, they made a great noise of the building they would erect; But this noise proceeded from their contestation, and their building advanced like that of Babel, that which the one builded, the other puld down, and in the end the division of tongues will make them forsake their work.

and the way of peace they have not known; and 16.
ordinarily those that burn down the house, know not what it is to build it up, and those who build up a Church or State, proceed by waies and rules quite contrary to those that ruine them; the sharpe and rigorous proceeding of our enemies wholly to raze the established order, witnesse they want knowledge to build an order in the Church; for to this purpose there is not onely required to conceive an Idea of Reformation, but to consider the matter they have in hand; and how to frame it; For as he is not the best Ingenier who knowes best how to make a Regular platforme upon paper, but he that can best accommodate his rules to the nature of the place which he fortifies; and it would be a strange

strange Method to pull down and lay level the place for to build it again Regularly. But its that wherein our new Reformes have laboured ; Certainly they neither understand the Theory , nor the Practick of the work they undertake , and their knowledge goes no further then destruction. It's true many of the Assembly desired the Scotch Discipline, and to establish it, courted the Scotch Armies.

We also respect these Armies , hoping that God will one day touch their hearts to defend the rights , and person of their Sovereign , and we pray God for their prosperity ; But let them give us leave to tell them mildly our advice of their Discipline , the wisest amongst us commend the subordination , and concatenation of their Synods , and do confesse that that was wanting in the English order , Judging that the Synodall power is not incompatible with the Episcopall ; But in an order well made, both the one , and the other is requisite , and it is impossible that the English Bishops, excellent in knowledge and piety , who have lived within these ninety yeares , should not know this very well, above all those who were imploud in the Reformation.

But behold that which hath hindred the ordinary use of Synods amongst us , Incontinent after the Reformation , it had been to ill purpose to have given all the Clergy liberty to Assemble in a Synod , Papistry being not then well rooted out of the Priests and Curates , and before the English Church was well well healed of this old Malady she fell into a New one, and was infected with a Fanatick and Malignant sect, who made piety consist in overthrowing all order and superiority in the Church, and to controule that of the Magistrate, whereupon our Soveraignes and their Prelates beholding the body of the Church swollen with evil humours, and mutinous superstition, continually ready to break forth, feared least the frequent use of Synods, should not be made use of by the discontented, to gather and associate a faction; And therefore accounted the surest way to maintain peace and truth was to keep these violent spirits in their duty by the Episcopall Rod, assisted with the Royall Scepter, and Certainly this way would have had better successe, if they had not let the bridle too loose for such hard mouths.

The Synod is proper to make ordinances, and the Bishop is proper to cause them to be observed: The Synod to hinder Tyranny, the Bishop to prevent confusion; the Synod to determine in point of Doctrine, the Bishop to maintaine order and discipline; the Synod to remedy inveterate evils, the Bishop to suppress inergent evils; and in the meane while both the one and the other serve to all these uses, and ought not to be separated in a Church where there is freedome, and where the estate upholds the Religion.

But in a Church which lives under a state of a contrary Religion, order must bend to necessity, and as it is not possible to have all the parts of Ecclesiasticall Government, also there

Method. fections, and take away many occasions of
Geneva.

Such are the Reformed Churches of France, where the order is suitable to their condition; and the Native piety and simplicity of their discipline in commended even by those of a diverse Profession.

Now having had leisure to examine their discipline, we find not that it doth much resemble the Scotch discipline, for the consistories and Synods of France have not Ruling elders, whose voices alwaies carry it, as they doe in Scotland. Their elders passe not any sentence in matter of Doctrine, neither have they the power of the keies to determine censures: All that Calvin granted them, was but praeesse moribus, to have an eye to the manners and behaviour of the flock in which they served as assistants to the Pastours, and this was a commendable use. But in Scotland the Elders command, for the Lord of the Parish is ordinarily the ruling Elder of the consistory, and in some manner is a lay Bishop, and although the Minister is alwaies moderator, its but for forme, for the Elders have the principall power, and being Deputies to the Assemblies, they keep there the same credit, above all in the generall Assembly, where Dukes, Marquesses, Earles and Barons have their voices, and decide the points of controversies and the censures of the Church.

We greatly respect the power of Synods, but we require that it be purely Ecclesiasticall,
 and

and that it be managed by none, but by those who are appointed of God; lay persons have not to do, but to assist them, except the King, who ought to have the exterior power (which the Scotch deny him) to convocate and dissolve their Assemblies to suppress disorders, without meddling himself with the interior or spirituall, for it seems to us a thing unreasonable, and contradictory to it self, that the other laiques should be admitted to the full capacity of the spirituall power equal or above the Ministers, and that the King onely should be excluded, and hath not so much as the exercise of his temporall and purely Royall power in the Assembly.

We could wish also that the power of their Consistories and Synods were a little more limited, for these Assemblies being Courts of conscience, which takes Cognisance of all the offences of the Church, they may enclose in their Jurisdiction, all criminall and civil causes of the Kingdome, there being no cause which hath not in it a point of conscience: And so hereby it may come, that the sentences of Judges may be controuled in the Consistory, and the Officers of the Crown, questioned about their managing of publique affaires, and so the Government of the State become purely Arbitrary.

And the power of the Ecclesiasticall Councell being such, the most unquiet and Ambitious will be ever pressing to be of it, whereupon sifings and factions will abound, Revenge and particular interest will turne the ballance ; There they will forme factions in the State, and parties against the King , for what is there that they dare not enterprife who have so vaste a power, which have no other limits then the extent of the flitting and moveable conscience of particulars , which give account to none , who pretend to have their Authority onely of divine right , and therefore are not subject to be controuled ? These are not conjectures , nor suppositions , but observations of long experience , certainly that personall citation which was sent by the nationall Synod of Scotland to their King when he was in the midst of his Armies in England, Feb. 1645. filled forraign Churches with amazement and scandall : And no lesse is the Authority they exercise even over their Parliaments , which having demanded advice of the Deputies of the Synod , concerning what they were to do with their King , the Ministers concluded , that they should not bring the King into Scotland , and that the Kingdome of Scotland ought not to espouse his quarrel for to maintaine his rights in England , and their advice passed for an ordinance , after this they cannot reprove the Bishops for being Councillours of State.

Monarchy which can endure neither Master, nor Companion, can hardly comply with this Court of Conscience , which gives Laws , but receives none , unlesse they themselves make them , and limit the King , but refuse to be limited by him , but the Magistrates of an Aristocratick , or popular Common wealth will will shift better with them, for this Court pretending an Ecclesiasticall Jurisdiction, purely Sovereign and Divine, yet neverthelesse admit lay men to the participation of this power; The Lords never faile to be members of this consistory and to Govern there. And thus the question touching the Ecclesiasticall authority is eluded.

Now although above all we desire to enjoy an Apostolicall and Episcopall discipline, where the Bishop assisted with the Councell of his Clergy Governs the Church, and admits other Pastors according to their degree and quality, to the participation of the power of the keys, yet neverthelesse if the revolution of the State brings in another discipline, our Ministers submit themselves to it, not to be Actors there, remembring themselves of their Duties and promise made at their Reception of Orders, but to suffer themselves to be Governed, Remembring that they are cald to preach the Gospel, and whither there be a good, or an evil order in the Church, or even none at all, the vocation binds them to feed the flock and to maintaine the holy Doctrin.

But indeed its great pittie to be reduced to expect a Discipline, of those that have none, and yet make the Kingdome of Christ to consist in it, for which they made such clamours, in their licentiousnesse and overthrow of all order, and lawfull vocation in the Church.

The Reformed Churches of France who employ all their Zeile and industry to maintain the purity of the Gospel, without contending with any about the outward Discipline, look upon with contempt and compassion, the impetuous weaknesse of our enemies, who overthrow the holy Doctrine, and ruine Church and State for points of Discipline, which is to lose the end for the accessaries, yea although these accessaries are not good in this regard, there being but two things to reprove in the Covenanters, their end and the meanes which they employ to attain that end.

CHAP. XIX.

That the Covenanters ruine the Ministers of the Gospel under Colour of Reformation.

ONE of the points of Reformation for which they laboured so much with Cannon shot, was to abase and pull down the Clergy, which is a work already done without proceeding further.

As for their greatnesse, the onely thing wherein it consisted, was taken from them in the year 1645. Which was the Bishops sitting and having power to vote in the Lords house, the rest is a small thing.

As for their Revenues, they are confiscated and sequestred, and even the Revenues of the Bishops were such as might cause rather ther pitty then envy , except four or five Bishopricks, the rest were so poor , that for to help them to uphold their Degree, and pay their dues to the King, Tenths and first fruits , his Majesty ever out of compassion gave them some other benefices , otherwise very few would have hazzarded the taking of them , the Bishopricks of England being like the ruined Monastries in some Countries , which have nothing remaining but the walls with nothing in them.

The children of those parents who had formerly fattened themselves by the Bishopricks have now swallowed the rest , and yet labour to begger the inferior Clergy : This is that they call Reformation , and in truth 'tis the Reformation of Scotland, where the Tenths of the Clergy are possessed by the ruling Elders, above all by the Lords , some of them having the Tenths of whole Provinces. Therefore ye need not wonder they fight with such Zeale for a Reformation which is so profitable.

In England ordinarily the great Towns and rich Parishes are impropriated , and in the hands of lay persons , the rest of the Benefices have but to provide in a Mediocrity for Students in Divinity ; Those who Reforme the Clergy , are those who possesse the goods of the Church , and besides the Tithes that are alienated , many of them even make use of the Tithes of the Clergy , with which they are lawfully invested , terrifying their poor Ministers with sequestration, too weak to contend against them , and force them to injurious and damageable contracts. How many Patrons are there who sell their Benefices to them who will give most ? And by the Infamous Simony of these Gentlemen, who make a noise of Reformation, the door of the Church is shut to the Clergy, unlesse they have a golden key to open it, and thus they preferre profit before conscience, tis well done of them to mend that which they have marred, and they of all other have reason to take in hand the Reformation of Ministers, because themselves have done what possibly they can to corrupt them.

Of all Liberall Professions, Divinity is the poorest; and have most Thornes in her way, and therefore Parents find it more profitable to put their children to a Trade, than bring them up in the Study of Divinity; and yet after all this their very poverty seemes superfluity in the eyes of envy, and untill these hungry Harpyes, have caught that little which hath escaped the claws of sacriledge, they will never leave calling for the Reformation of the Clergy, that is to say wholly to ruine them.

The devil who hates the Gospel, labours to ruine it by the poverty of those who preach it, knowing well that the indigence of Ministers brings contempt upon the Ministry; And that the Rewards being taken away, the Study of Divinity will be neglected, and then there will be none but the meanest of the people, like to the Priests of Jeroboam. Poverty abates the courage, and clips the wings of conception, and oftentimes occasions evil designs and Councels in those whose means are too small for their Degree. To do well in Pulpit, and by writing to build up indeed the Kingdome of Jesus Christ, and to destroy the works of the devil, they ought to have their spirits free, and not oppressed through necessity, Magna mentis opus, nec de Lodice paranda Attonita; They that require, and would a man should do well, and yet will not doe well to him, 'Tis an unjust demand, and many now in England passe the injustice of Pharaoh, requiring double the number of Bricks, and yet give to them lesse straw.

If they alledge to us that Jesus Christ and his Apostles were poor, we answer, that so were their auditors, and the Condition of our Lord and his Disciples is a pattern as well for layicks as the Clergy. And if the primitive Church of Hierusalem spoken of in the Acts, ought to be proposed for an example of the Ecclesiasticall and civil Government of all Christendome, the Clergy of England humbly beseech the Gentlemen, our Reformers, to imitate these pious soules, who sold their possessions, and brought the price, and laid them down at the Apostles feet. Let them sell their Lands, and bring the mony to their Pastors to dispose of according to their discretion, and the Ministers will part with their Tithes.

If we were now to speak to the Clergy of England, we would exhort them to love their office and their Benefice, and now that God hath called them to the Crosse and poverty, to rejoyce in their conformity to Jesus Christ, who made himselfe poor to enrich us, expecting their reward in Heaven, bearing patiently the spoyling of their goods, accounting themselves rich enough if God be Glorified, and his Gospel purely Preached, but these Exhortations have an evil grace in the mouth of them who come to plunder or sequester them, which is as if a thief in robbing a traveller should preach a Sermon to him of Christian patience and contempt of the world, tis the Method of our enemies, who driving their Ministers from their houses, and Revenues, read such Lectures of Divinity to them.

For the present, some Ministers who have been the principall instruments of their party, have means and honour; And yet little enough, considering the great service they have done them. Peters their great and active Agent, had for a recompence given him, but with great Glory, and ostentation, two hundred pound per Annum in land; But who so considers well the genius of the Faction, will judge that, that little good they do now to their Ministers will not long continue. It were a pleasant thing to consider, if there were not greater cause of sorrow in it, how of two Ambitions, the simple serves the Ambition of the crafty, for the Ministers who animated the people against their King, are people impatient of subjection, who would be every one of them Kings and Bishops in their Parishes, and during these agitations, they raige in the pulpit a time, but they

they are set a work by those who manage the publique affaires , who raise them up and flatter them to the people , untill they have done their work with them , for when these Gentlemen shall have done to destroy Church and State , and built their Imaginary Throne of Jesus Christ , upon the ruines of the Kingdome , they will have so strict a hand of the Discipline , that the power and the profit shall remain with them , allowing their spirituall Fathers a portion purely spirituall , and will discharge them of those cares which accompany the riches and honours of the world.

Before these civil warres , the Bishops were profitable to all Ministers , friends and enemies , for those who submitted themselves freely to them enjoyed their protection , and those who opposed them were respected and secretly maintained by the adversaries of the Episcopall order , but now the Bishops are cut off , there is neither protection , nor opposition , that can gain respect or support to the Clergy. The stubborn and Refractory Ministers have struck so violently at the root of that great tree which they have now made to fall , after they had been a long time cover'd under the shadow of it , but they may assure themselves that it will not belong before they themselves be crushed under the fall of it , and draw upon themselves a just punishment : They will then consider too late , that they have been but instruments to the covetousnesse and Ambition of others , and in the dissipation of the Goods of the Church, they shall be dealt with as the Captain of Samaria, to whom the King of Israel committed the keeping of the Gate, where the provision was to enter; then when the People after a long Famine pressed to enter, they shall behold the plenty but not taste of it; but be trodden under foot.

CHAP. XX.

Of the Corruptions of Religion objected to the English Clergy, and the waies that the Covenanters took to Remedy them.

VWE will answer to the Objections against the King and his party, and will begin with the most ordinary.

Now they reproach us with corruption in Religion, in such an accusation we must have regard to them that speak it; It's those who turn the rising up of the People against their King into a Doctrine and Article of Faith, It's those that have absented themselves from the Lords Supper for these many years, those who summoned their King before them, to give account of his actions, those who have committed against his sacred person an execrable paricide, those who will employ the Body and bloud of our Lord to knit up a conspiracy against their King. Those who neither teach the people in the Church, nor their Children at home, the ten
Com-

Commandments, the Creed, nor the Lords Prayer, those who suffer and make use of all damnable Sects, and punish none; But those who teach to suffer for Righteousnesse, and not to resist the Supream Powers, to all these we might add many more hatefull Truths; But we will not without necessity publish the evil that may be hid, for we love not to teach evil by representing it: Whosoever shall consider their belief and practice, will never wonder that such kind of People find something to say against our Religion. God be praised, that thus opposing us, they make all the world to know that we are not guilty of their evil opinions amongst men, blame and praise take their force from him that gives them. Those who accuse us of corruption in Religion, should do well to tell us first, amongst the scores of Religions that are, what their Religion is; For there are many Religions which are together with the Covenanters, and live together, as so many wilde beasts in the Ark, who when they are gone out thence, will devour one another, or flee one from another, but at present they all agree to tear us a pieces.

Now to these Accusers of Corruption, we present the Thirty nine Articles of our Confession, which they and we have sworn, and subscribed, and let their Consciences judge between them and us, which of the two Parties have violated and falsified their Oath. How have they observed the Thirty sixth Article, in which they acknowledged that the consecration of Arch-Bishops and Bishops used in England, and Confirmed by Act of Parliament, ment, contains nothing in it, that is either Superstitious or Impious; And yet now thunder out against this Order as a mark and branch of Antichrist; Is this to want Memory, or Conscience? Can they upbraid us with any thing like unto this, to have opposed in a Body, and condemned an Article of our Confession. The Corruptions which they alledge against us, are falsely so named, or at the worst they are but faults of particulars. But the Body of the Church hath kept and doth keep the Confession of their Faith inviolable. If they produce any we would have brought in any new Doctrines or Customes, who can produce others that have opposed them, and that the Religion subsisted entire, whilst they subsisted.

Let them not rob those Divines of their due praise who in the beginning of the Parliament laboured sincerely to confirm the Doctrine, and to stifle the difference about Discipline. We have before represented, with what Wisdom, Piety, and Vigor, many Bishops and Divines, chosen by his Majesty, had lead the two Parties to accord upon a certain number of Propositions, which contained the Body of Religion, and what great hope there was, that the point of Discipline would be amiably composed; and how a Faction, enemies to the peace of the Church, and jealous least any good should come by the means of the Bishops, broke off that excellent accord, which could never since be renewed; Persecuting the Prelates with all rigor, never giving them rest, untill they had Imprisoned them as Criminals, although they were not guilty of any other crime, then because they would have terminated the differences of Religion. But this was to stifle the Covenant in the Cradle, and take away all pretext from this holy Rebellion. It's not then a wonder if this sin be not pardoned them, it appears by the testimony of the Reverend Pastors of the Church of Genevah, in what esteem our Religion was amongst our Neighbours, for in their Epistle to the Assembly at London, They beseech God that he would restore our Church and Kingdome to such a high degree of holinesse, and glory, as it had shined in untill that present; By this they acquit us of the Corruption, which they impute to us, and do obliquely accuse this Assembly, and those that imploy them, that by their meanes the Kingdome hath lost his glory and the Church her holinesse.

Now put the case that the Corruption were as great amongst us, as they make it, yea put the case also, that even in our Lyturgy, composed with so much piety and wisdom, that there were something to mend, as a freckle in a fair Face, & that the Discipline ought to be overlooked, what could there be more expected of the King and the Clergy, then to submit the Persons and Things to be Reformed? How often had the King offered to joyn his Authority to the Advice of Parliament, and a Nationall Synod, to examine and punish the faulty, and correct disorders, yea and even the Lawes themselves, if there were need?

here what obedience they yeilded : A part of the House of Commons, having driven away the other by violence, and popular tumults, and put to flight nine parts of ten of the house of Lords, beides the Bishops who represented the Body of the Clergy ; This small rest, in lieu of a Nationall Synod, by lawfull deputation of the Church, chose some Ministers of their Faction, for to make use of their Advice so far as it should please them. These Ministers, who had no Deputation, nor Representation, nor Authority from the Body of the English Church, and having divers Lay persons joyned with them, who wholly govern them, mould a Religion all New, defame the Reputation of the Church, and Confession, to which they had sworn Obedience ; Invite to their aide Forraign Churches, as their Brethren, and Ordain that which serves the Intention of their Matters.

We know that amongst these Divines, there were some men of Merit ; Persons which we know, had it been in their power, would have overcome evil with good : But amongst pieces of gold there is many times a great deal of small money, like unto our clipped half Testors ; they are the little heads without learning.

If the two Houses had Assembled the body of the Clergy, as was proposed to them by his Majesty, they had found themselves filled with Orthodoxe Persons, and they cannot complain if those persons whom they had most desire to, received not the publick censure of the Clergy, since they would not permit, mit the Clergy to assemble themselves; neither can they complain, that any guilty hath gone unpunished, for they have taken a sure course, for by the universal ruine of the Deans and Chapters, they have involved the innocent with the guilty.

Hearken what the King said hereupon.

I was content to accord and render to the Presbyter (that is to say, to the Body of Pastors) all the Right which with reason and discretion they could pretend, in their Conjunction with the Episcopall degree, but to suffer them wholly to invade the Ecclesiasticall power, and to cut off altogether with the sword, the Authority of this ancient Order, for to invest themselves in it, it was that which I accounted neither just, in regard of the Bishops, nor sure nor profitable in regard of the Presbyter himself, neither any way convenient for the Church or State.

A right and good Reformation might have been easily produced by moderate Councils, and I am perswaded such Councils would have given more contentment, even to those very Divines, who have been perswaded, with much gravity and formality to serve the designs of others, which without doubt, many of them now acknowledge, although they dare not make their discontent appear for finding themselves frustrated of their Intentions.

I am very well assured, that the true Method to Reform the Church, cannot subsist with the perturbation of the Civil State, and that Religion cannot justly be advanced in depressing Loyalty; which is one of the Principall Ingredients and Ornaments naments of true Religion, for after the Precept to fear God, the next following is, to honour the King.

I make no doubt but the Kingdome of Christ may be established, without pulling down mine; and in a time free from partialities, its impossible any should passe for a good Christian, who shewes not himself a good Subject.

The Government of Christ serves to confirm mine, and not to overthrow it, for as I acknowledge, I hold my power of him, so I desire to exercise it for his Glory; and the good of his Church.

If any one had sincerely proposed the Government of Christ, or understood in their heart what it required, they would never have been so ill governed in their words and actions, as well towards me, as one towards another.

As the good ends cannot justify the evil ways, so also, the evil beginnings cannot produce good conclusions, unlesse God by a miracle of mercy make Light to spring out of Darknesse, Order out of our Confusion, and Peace from our unruly Passions. This is spoken as a King, as a Philosopher, and as a good Christian.

Our enemies to blind the eyes of their Neighbours, made them believe a long time that they desired such a Reformation as theirs, but the Hypocrisie of this Profession appeared then, when the King offered to assemble a Nationall Synod, and to invite the Neighbour Churches to it, whom these People would seem to imitate. And this the good King would never have named, had he not an intention to deferre much to their Judgement.

ment. But of this his Majesty could never obtain an Answer ; For it was that which the Independants feared above all, and we see not that the Presbyterians did any way favour this proposition ; The Actions both of the one and the other were such, that it was the surest course for them to palliate them with Declarations sent a far off, rather then to have them brought to light here at home in a Synod ; And they were very well content to receive their Neighbours to their Society, but not to admit them to their Counsell. They have hereby made it appear, that it was not Reformation, but the Revenews of the Church they pursued ; otherwise they would have embraced the proposition of his Majesty, and the request of the Clergy, who desired nothing more then to be heard in a lawfull Synod, and to Reform willingly, that which was displeasing to some. But this had untwisted the designs of their enemies, who then should have had no pretext to ruine the Clergy, and enrich themselves with their spoiles, and take from Monarchy the support of the Church, if the Ecclesiasticks had been Reformed.

Then let the rage and invective malice of our enemies greaten our faults in quality and number, as much as they can, let them make small spots, Imposthumes ; Let them paint us out in false Colours, and disfigure us like Devils to the eyes of all the World ; All that the severest justice can require of us, is to amend and freely to submit our selves to the censure of a lawfull Assembly ; and then when a great King, who is subject to none but God, shall come to them, and offer to change that which hath been practised or tollerated, and to lend his ear to receive better information. O this was a Grace capable to mollifie hearts of stone and to turn the complaints of his subjects into acclamations of Joy and Praises.

But they will neither the Grace of the King, nor our amendment. To these offers of the King so sincere and frequent, they answered not but by complaints and blowes; and they consulted not of meanes to correct us, but to destroy us, they will not take the paines to cleanse the Church, they will cut it up by the root, root and branch. Tis the watch-word of the seditious, whereby they pretend to know those that are of the godly party; and they have also put an unnaturall maxime in the mouth of the furious and blind People, that the Reformation must be made in blood. This they call to Renew, or Revive the Church; But it's as the Daughters of Pelias undertook to make their Father young againe, who to that end cut his Throat to let his old blood passe out of his Body, but after, it was not in their power to put in new. God keep us from them who come to Reform the Church their Mother with a Sword, and that would cut our Throates to make us young again. Certainly beholding Chyrurgeons coming to let us bloud with a Sword in both hands, we have reason to withdraw into some safe quarter, and to fear a healing which will not take away the Evil, but in taking away our Life.

We dare say for our Clergy, that if it should cost them their lives to redeem the peace of their King and State, they would account them well employed, and willingly consent to be cast over bord with Jonas, that their losse might appease the tempest.

This is of greatest anguish and affliction, to see Murther passe for Piety, then to suffer in their persons; and they cheerfully wish, that a potion of their blood could quench the heate of their bloody zeal.

This Zeal appeared in the Title of Sions Plea, and in the Book called, Christ on his Throne: The first pleades for the Presbyterian, the other for the Independant. Both of these Books have this Text in the Frontispice: Bring those mine enemies, that would not that I should raign over them, and slay them before me. By Enemies they understand those who will not embrace their Discipline. And their Actions now have, and do, make a bloody Commentary upon the Text. That if our Lord Jesus Christ, who poured forth his most precious blood to spare ours, put not a stop to this Flux of blood, these Zealots will Reform England as the Anabaptists Reformed Munster, and as the Spaniards converted the West Indies.

Let all Christian Churches of the World then know, that the English Church confesseth humbly before God, her Infirmities, and acknowledgeth her self the Defaults which peace and the length of Time is wont to bring to the best established Order, and hath done her duty to Reform, submitting her self to a generall Synod, and the States of the Kingdome under the Authority and Conduct of her good King, and that a Sacrilegious and Murthering faction, Drunken with the Bloud of their Sovereign, and the Goods of the Church : Having oppressed the Liberty of the Assembly of States, snatched this holy work out of her hands, and would hear of no other Reformation, but her totall Destruction ; Introducing in the place of Ancient and Lawfull Order, a Chaos of Prophan and Licentious Heresies, destructive to Religion and State.

CHAP. XXI.

An Answer to the Objection, That the King made Warre against the Parliament.

IT's the ordinary Complaint, of the Covenanters, that the King made War against his Parliament, a Phrase which seems tacitely to imply, That the King Rebelled against his Superiours, and indeed there are many that understood it so in good earnest, conceiving the Parliament to be above the King. And hereupon it was declared by the House of Commons, at Westminster, That the Kings coming to their House was Treason, as if the Majesty resided in the Commons, but how ridiculous and false this is, hath heretofore been shewed: and yet they could in no other sence call the House at Westminster, his Parliament, since they had taken up Armes against his Majesty; doubtlesse those of both Houses, who adhered to the King at Oxford, without Comparison the more considerable in quality, were rather his Parliament, for these were for him, and the other against him.

Moreover by this frequent expression, they would frequently signifie, that the King was the aggressour, and he that first assaulted them, A thing which they have much laboured to perswade the world, although it be notoriously known that his Enemies had seized upon his Forts, Towns, Magaziens, Ships, Revels, and Levied Souldiers, before ever the King had so much as one single Company of Horse or Foot. When he first came to York, he had not so much as his Ordinary Guards, whereas his Enemies had all the strength of the kingdom, they wanted only God on their side, and this great power encouraged the Seditious in all Countries where he passed to entertaine him with the same courtesie the Gergasites received Christ Jesus, beseeching him to depart out of their Quarters, and the good King had then this conformity with his Saviour, that he had not where to lay his head. He was then in a condition to suffer, but his Enemies in a posture to oppose.

When he would in a peaceable manner without Armes enter into his Town of Hull, he found the Gates shut, and the Walls garnished with Souldiers, presenting their Muskets against him; upon this his Majesty Levied six Companies of Foot, and two Cornets of Horse, for the Guard of his Person, but set not up his Standard untill four Moneths after this prodigious Act of Hostility and Rebellion, having often before, endeavoured to reduce his Subjects to their Obedience by all reasonable and Christian Offers, witnesse a number of most Excellent Declarations composed and written by himse'f, wherein the World beheld the Sincerity of his Actions, with the Piety and candor, of his Spirit, worthy so great a Prince.

could not perswade them who had any remembrance or Common sence, that the King began the War, laboured to prove that although they began, yet their Armies were but defensive; affirming, that a War undertaken, upon a just fear, was defensive, yea although they struck the first blow, and that they seized upon the Forts, Magaziens, and Revenews of the King, because they feared he would make War upon them; That is to say that they made War upon him, least he should make War upon them. A reason much like that of Count Gondomore Ambassador of Spain in England, who by his cunning and subtilty had wrought so far, as to have a gallant English Knight to be condemned and put to death; being demanded what evil he had done that he so persecuted him: Answered, That it was not for any evil he had done, but for that evil which he might doe.

But the Court that did it, had just reasons, far from the Spanish Interests; But in these mens dealings with the King, were he even a Subject, the injustice is both without reason and without example: For, was there ever any Court of Justice, which condemned a man to lose both his Goods and his Life, not because he had done any Evil, but for fear he should.

That which would be most unjust against the meanest Subject, can it possibly be thought, and reputed a work of Piety and Justice against their lawfull Sovereign? But leaving these persons, who from the beginning had this Diabolical designe, which since they have in-humanely executed; We will believe of many of the Covenanters, that the intent of their Army was not to punish the King for the pretended Exorbitancies of his past Government, although they laboured by all means to perpetuate the memory, and to stifle those eminent and signall Acts of Grace, by which the King had merited the Love of his People beyond all his Predecessors. We are willing also to believe that some amongst them condemn the Doctrine of Goodman, turned since into sad practice, That Judges ought to summon Princes before them for their Offences, and proceed against them, as against other Criminals and Malefactors.

If it were not then for the punishing of what was passed, it was for fear of the Future, they took up Armes, which indeed is the only reason left them. For after the King had promised to give content to his People, in all their reasonable Requests represented to him, and they had taken the Power out of his hands, then when he would have accomplished his Promises; all the Reason they give for so violent a proceeding is, That they durst not trust the King; Which verily is a most frivolous and injurious excuse. Which is as if one had a Neighbour that dwelt by him, more mighty then himself, and whose displeasure he feared, it should be permitted him to watch his opportunity to surprize his house, seize upon his Revenews, and drive from his Possessions, to free and deliver him from fear? But such an action as this from Subjects towards their Prince, is beyond all comparison son more unjust. The question between the King and his subjects, being not, Whether they may with confidence leave the sword in the Kings hand? but whether God hath committed the sword to the King to be borne by him?

Now in this their dealings with the King, they give him an evil example, for by the same reason he may take from his subjects the propriety, they have in their estates, because he dares not trust them, and finds by sad experience, they use it for his destruction; And he should have much more reason to do it, since the subjects hold their lands of the King; but the King holds not his power of the people; Prudence ought not to seise upon Justice. The care of a mans selfe cannot give him a right to the goods of another: The duty of a Christian is not to fortify himself against his fears, but to obey the commandements of God: But if his fear and forecast carries him beyond his duty, he should above all fear him that can cast both body Luk. 12. and soule into hell; Yea I say unto you fear him. 5. Taking then that which themselves accord, that the subjects took up Armes to secure themselves against their feares, had not the King as much reason to take up Armes after their example to provide against his? If he had been their equall, this reason had been sufficient enough, how much more then being their Sovereign, for the sword that they had drawn against him, was his own; those Forts, Townes, Ships Armes and Revenews, which they employed against him, were his,

his, therefore he had a double Reason to take up Armes one to defend himselfe, and another to recover his own rights.

Sermon
I. of Duells to the Templers.

By all lawes Divine, and Humane the King alone hath the power of the sword, whosoever strikes without him is a Murtherer, St Bernard preaching to the Knights Templers of Hierusalem; To perswade them from Duells, saith that two things are required to make a Combate just and lawfull, The defence of a just cause, and obedience to a lawfull power. The last of these is the principall, and that alone which gives to Souldiers a just call, for in warrs ordinarily the interests of Princes are onely known to themselves, and often the right and wrong being of two sides, we esteem it not necessary that every Souldier be perfectly satisfied of the Justice of the Armies of his Sovereign; But as for obedience to a lawfull power, it's a Condition absolutely requisite to justify the taking up of Armes of a Souldier, and there is no Exception, nor Modification that can be brought against it.

August.
lib. 21.
Contr<sup>a</sup>
Faustum
Cap. 75.

St Augustine saith, that a just man bearing Armes under a sacrilegious Prince, may justly obey his commands, if he knows not the warre wherein he serves, is against the commandement of God, or if he be doubtfull of it; So that the Prince may be faulty in commanding, and the subject innocent in rendring the Duty of his obedience: According to this wise Councell, if it be not palpably manifest that the commandement of the Prince do transgresse the lawes of God, whom we must ever obey rather rather then men , the subject in matter of war be it forrain or civil , hath but one thing to consider for conscience , namely where the lawfull power is ? Who he is to whom God hath committed the sword , and who hath power to give it to others , and to whom God hath subjected him ; in taking up the sword at his command , we cannot do amisse.

This gives full satisfaction to their consciences , who took up Armes and fought for the King , for besides the goodnesse of his defence which is just and necessary, if ever any were , they learne that it is possibly to fight justly for him, even when his cause may be unjust ; But without him it is impossible to draw the sword justly , much lesse against him, how just soever the complaints and fears of the contrary party that draws the sword be. All lawfull demands , Religious intentions , specious pretexts , pretended necessities , the publique good ( the Masque of all Rebel-lions ) prayers , fastings , Covenanting with God , all this and much more can never make a warre just , which receives the sword from him to whom God hath not given it, and draws it against him to whom God hath committed it.

Therefore the principall of the Covenanters well perceiving this , endeavoured from the beginning to make the King either give them, or lend them the power of the Militia. In doing whereof they did much wrong to their cause , for if they had the lawfull power of the sword , why did they then so often demand

mand it of the King; and if they had it not, why did they draw the sword without the lawfull power, and against him to whom the power appertained by their own Confession, why else should they ask it of him. They either did injustice to the King to take from him the Militia, or else they did injustice to themselves to demand it; Certainly by their importunity for the Militia, they manifestly condemned themselves, and acknowledged that the Militia belonged to the King, and that they made the warre without his authority, and therefore they had great need of many Sermons, fastings, prayers, protestations, Oaths upon oaths, to bind in many knots this Covenant, which otherwise held by nothing, and to perswade the people, that instead of the Lawfull and ordinary power they had an Extraordinary one, which was Conducted by Revelation.

1 Sam.
15. 23.

Rebellion is against nature, Samuel saith it's as the sin of Witchcraft, or Divination, it is composed of such charms which for a time corrupts the use of reason, but cannot destroy the faculty, but at last the cloud will vanish and they shall retain nought, but the impression of shame, and Astonishment for their past Errors, and an earnest desire of an acknowledgment. This naturall notion is imprinted in the hearts of subjects, That they ought to obey the King, and that to him pertaines the power of peace, and warre. The very name of King will make even Souldiers spring from the ground to serve him, the Plow shares shall furnish him with swords, and the

the flayles and long staffes shall fight for his Crown. The Armes which they have ravishr from him , shall acknowledge their Master , and return of themselves to him , as those which were unjustly taken from Ajax, It's a very hard thing to fight against nature : This appeared in the Counties of the Covenanters, wherein whilst the King was Master , he raised ten thousand men in eight dayes , but after the Covenanters commanded in them, although they levied Souldiers contiually, their forces ever decreased , and those they listd in the day , disbanded and run away in the night. That if the secret Judgment of God which would chastice us, had not renderd the people fearfull and dismaid for a time, such was their number and hatred against the party of the Covenanters , that they had easily dispatched the Countries against the King, though themselves were disarmed : And it must be in the end that nature surmounts the Constraint , for the King is the center of the State, whither all parts tend by their own proper weight , and wherein all the lines of the common interests terminate.

Their complaints of violence by the Kings forces are of no consideration, the Armies of the King as well as those of the Covenanters were not composed all of Saints, but these complaints sound ill in their mouthes , who listd up their hands against their Sovereigne, those who had so often planted their Artilery against the squadron , where the person of the King was , and had shot fifty Cannon shot against the Queen in her bed , and after all this cut of the head of their lawfull Sovereign, can they assume the impudence to complain of our Souldiers taking away their poultry, and killing their sheep? If those who were in Actuall Rebellion against their King, had been punished by our Souldiers as they deserved, they would never have had the power to complain, that their houses were plundered, or that they spoiled and destroyed their goods, we dare maintain, that those amongst the Covenanters that suffer'd lesse then death, have suffer'd lesse then they deserved: we do not desire that every one should be punished according to his deserts, for we would not that God should so deale with us, but that our enemies may know, both by the Divine law, and the law of Nations, every person that rebells against his Prince, is guilty of death, and loseth his propriety in his goods and possessions. Let them know also, that being destitute of lawfull Authority for the warre, and drawing their swords against him that bears the sword by Divine Authority, every stroak they struck against the faithfull subjects of the King, they committed an Execrable murther, and every penny they levyed upon them, they committed rapine, employing their robberies to maintain murther and Rebellion; if the names of these crimes offend their eares, the crimes themselves should much more afflict their consciences; these termes proceed not from passion, but flow from the necessary consequence of this truth, That the warre of the Covenanters is destitute of all Authority, lawfull and Divine.

Oh

Oh that every Christian who hath drawn his sword in this sinfull cause would seriously consider how he shall answer it before God and man, and that he may have horror and dread in him for the evil he hath deserved, and yet much more for that which he hath committed.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the Depraved and evil faith of the Covenanters.

BUT we cannot so slightly let them passe with their fore-alledged excuse for the warre, that they durst not trust the King. The cause is evident, which is because they had taken from him all the ground or reason, that might be that he should trust them, nothing being more to be distrusted then a Depraved and ill faith; the King permitted them to perpetuate the Parliament as long as they pleased, he committed himself wholly over to their faith, affection and conscience, if any thing oblidge a man to be faithfull, it is to repose an entire, and free confidence in him, and there is nothing more odious and unworthy the name of man, then to employ that assurance, and confidence they have freely committed to us, to deceive and ruine them. They themselves after this signall favour, without example, Often declared to the world, that if they should abuse so great a trust to the dammage and detriment of his Majesty, they should be unworthy to live upon the earth, but this was before the Loyall subjects had separated themselves from their company. They are then condemned by their own confession, for that most signall Act of trust, such as never King gave to his subjects, they returned him the most Infamous and perfidious Acts, and base ingratitude, that ever subjects rendred to their King. He that said, Fidelem si putaveris facies, the meanes to make men faithfull, was to think them so, was never known to these men.

In conscience can ye beleieve that when the King committed to them this great power, that he understood it thus: That when he should refuse to do any thing they requested him, he gave them liberty to force him to do it, or to do it without him, to take from him his children, to seize upon his Revenews, to turn his Armies, Navies, and Forts, against him, to make a broad seale, and to break his, to dispose of all the offices of the Crown, to levey forraign Souldiers and bring them into his Kingdome, to deprive his subjects of their goods and possessions, to drive the Ministers of the Gospel from their flocks, to rob the Church of her Revenews, to overthrow the Antient laws of the Land, and to make a Religion all new? After all this can any man wonder if they durst not trust the King, for where is the criminall or malefactor that dares commit himself to, or trust the Judge, and where is the Cozener and deceiver, who being discovered dares trust him whom he hath Cozened and deceived.

If

If by these vile actions they have violated the trust the King reposed in them, and if by the Act for the Continuance of the Parliament, the King gave them a power to deal thus with him, we referre our selves to the better part of the Parliament, who withdrew themselves to the King, abhorring such a prodigious violation of the publique faith, and of the duty of subjects and Christians unfaithfullnesse; they committed the like to the people, who deputed and committed to them the publique safety: For doubtlesse in their choise it never enter'd into the Spirits of them who sent them, to invest them with an absolute power over their goods and persons, much lesse over their King, for they could not give that which they had not, neverthelesse they have executed this power, casting their fellow Citizens out of their houses and possessions, and gather'd together great treasure out of the rents of the King and his subjects, manifesting themselves very liberal of the goods of others.

But they defend these actions by a new maxime of State, invented upon this occasion; Some of the principall Citizens of London being oppressed by their great and often Taxes, came to the house, and represented to them that it was their duties to maintaine the subjects in the propriety of their goods, and beseeched them, not to fall themselves into that inconvenience which they were bound to remedy. The Gentlemen of the House of Commons answered them, that in truth the subjects might plead the propriety of their goods against the King; but not against the Parliament, to whom it appertained to dispose of all the goods of the Kingdome; but to perswade the people to believe this, is a very hard taske, who rather Judged, that the Parliament whom they had chosen, had violated the publique faith, and the trust committed to them, and had taken that into their disposing which was never committed them. Let these Gentlemen never hereafter speak so loud of their publique faith, since they have lost it, nor ever attempt to borrow more money upon so sorry a caution.

There were none in either Houses who had not often taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, by which they acknowledged the King their Sovereign, depending of none, and had sworn to him Loyalty and obedience. They moreover took the Protestation made in the beginning of the Parliament, and imposed upon the whole Kingdome, wherein also they sware the same thing. The Oath of the Covenant which was taken after, renew'd the same promise, and there they swore to defend the person, and authority of the King, and cause the world to behold their fidelity, and that they would not in the least thing diminish his just power, and greatnesse. Consider here (good Reader) Oaths enough to bind them to performe and keep their promise. But this multitude of Oaths is a kind of prooffe of their ill faith, for they that swear often, manifest thereby, that they think themselves unworthy to be believed, and distrust, that every one mistrusts

mistrusts them ; It had been better for them to have been faithfull to their King without wearing ; for as in the Grammar Latine, two Negatives make an Affirmative, these on the contrary in stead thereof , would seem to make two Affirmatives to make a Negative , and that many Oaths to be faithfull to their Sovereign bound them to do the contrary ; for in effect these last Oaths were solely employed to ruine the antient Oath of Allegiance , for if their intentions had been simply to be faithfull to their Sovereign , they needed have taken no other Oath then the first. Therefore after these two new Oaths came the third, which they called the Negative Oath, in which they caused men to swear ; That they should neither directly, nor indirectly assist the King in this warre : And thus behold in Fine the maske taken off , and the intention of their former Oaths uncovered.

There can be no greater Symptome of a desperate sick State , then the multiplication of Oaths to forme parties and factions , and we may say after the Prophet Jeremy, 23. 10. The land mourns because of Oaths.

As for the principalls who imposed the Oaths , they made use of them to halter, and intangle the Consciences of the people , for to serve their Ambition , practising the Doctrine of Lyfander, who taught that men ought to be amused with Oaths ; as children with bables ; and as for the people upon whom the Oaths were imposed , for the most part they took them rather for imitation, then knowledge, knowledge, or for feare, or from a blind Zeale, or an implicate faith. Moreover the multitude of Oaths do imbase the Dignity; and a people accustomed to them, respect no more an Oath, then their old shoes. Those also that sweare often, are often forsworn, overthrowing one Oath with another.

But the Oath of the Covenant hath this singular, wherein it surpasseth all Chymera's Centaures, Hyppogriffes in extravagance and contradiction, for in taking it in the Sense of the Covenanters, they overthrow this Oath by the Oath it self? And they forswear that which they had sworn; for in swearing that they would defend the person and authority of the King, and make the world behold their Fidelity, according to their opinion they are bound to make warre against him, and by vertue of this Oath, they persecuted, Rob'd, and after all deposed him. Oh supream degree of perfidy, and frantick blindnesse? Have we not whereat to mourn and lament, to behold these illuminated Reformers so plunged in the Gall of Bitternesse, and bonds of iniquity, for to persecute their good King with all rage and violence, because they had sworn to defend him, and to be faithfull to him.

This Oath was called Covenant, that is to say, alliance, or Confederation, because those that took it (for at present its forbidden to be taken) pretended to make an alliance and Covenant with God; This Oath is yet in vogue in Scotland. It's their new Covenant, besides besides that of the new Testament, and the Moderne Canonick Scripture, which is Judge in all cases of conscience, and from which there is no appeale.

Their ill faith is moreover evident in the composition of this Oath, and certainly it's the onely thing evident in the third Article, which is a discourse so twisted and interwoven, composed expressely not to be understood: There they swear to defend the person and authority of the King in defence of Religion and the publique liberty. It's very hard to say what that signifies, every good soule who suffer'd himsele to be perswaded to take this Oath, understood thereby, that to defend the person of the King, was a necessary point, both to preserve their Religion and liberty, and that they could not fear God as they ought without honouring the King, and those that took the Oath in this sense were bound to fight against the Covenanters for the defence of their Religion and Soveraign.

But the unworthy Companions of the Covenant, interpreted it thus, that they bind themselves to defend the person and authority of the King, so farre forth as it is compatible with the defence of Religion and liberty. Now (say they) we find that the defence of the person, and authority of the King is incompatible with the defence of Religion, and the publique liberty, and therefore we are bound to oppose and ruine the King for the defence of liberty and Religion. And thus it appears that this malicious obscurity is a fold of the serpent, and a lurking ho'e of the evil spirit, even the rather when we narrowly consider this construction, to defend one thing in defence of another, which signifies nothing, and wants both true Logick and common sense.

The Oath being a profession before God and the strongest affirmation of all, had need to have been cleare, and couched in such terms, that every one might have understood it in the same sense they took it; but to insert such equivocations, was to abuse the Name of God, whom they took to witnesse, and the simplicity of the People. He that takes a forked Oath, and understands it not in the sense that he that gives it, or understands it not at all, sweares not in Truth in Righteousnesse, and Judgement, which are the qualities required in an Oath, for he calls God to witnesse his hypocrisie, blindness and timidity.

The same Article makes profession of Fidelity to the King, and to diminish nothing of his just Authority and greatnesse. It's no new thing for Rebels to take the Oath of Allegiance to their Sovereign, to Combine a Faction against him. The Mutineers in the time of Richard the Second, took an Oath to be faithfull to the King and People, and yet nevertheless made use of this Oath to stir up the People to ruine the King: And these did the like; and when hereupon we taxe them with unfaithfullnesse, and breach of their Oath, they Answer, and pay us with a distinction betwixt the politick and personall capacity of the King, and they tell us that it was

was against Charles they made the War, & not against the King, making the King a pure Idea, an Accident without a Substance. It's very hard for them to say what became of the politick capacity of the King, then when they beheaded him in his personall capacity, for they so long honoured him in Idea, that at last they massacred him in substance.

But they forget that in the same Article they had sworn to be faithfull to the person of the King, and protested to defend his Person and Authority; as things conjoynd and inseparable: So strong is truth; and respect due to Sovereignty, so naturall to subjects, that even in the Oath which they formed, to confederate against him, their duty is couched in expresse terms, which will one day be produced in judgement against them.

But in good earnest have we not much to wonder at, and to acknowledge the wrath of God, in the blindness of these men, that so many millions of men should think they were bound to persecute the King to all extremity, and to take away his Goods, Honour, Liberty, Safety, and at last his life; because they had sworn to defend the Person and Authority of the King, and make the world behold their fidelity, and that they would diminish nothing of his just Power and Authority: Is it possible that their by-got Zeal could so dislocate their brains, and abrutish their spirits, as to make them commit so many crimes and enormities, upon so unreasonable a consequence. Oh Lord create in us a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within us.

In the Fourth Article of this Oath, they promise to endeavour with all their power, to bring to condign punishment all those who were the cause of separating the King from his People; And according to this, it was, they made the People believe a long time, that the occasion of their taking up Armes was to bring the King to his Parliament, but the hypocrisie of Protestation, is now clearly manifested, for when the King offered to return to his Parliament, they utterly refused to receive him; telling him plainly if he came, he should come at his peril. Forbidding all Persons whatsoever, under pain of death to receive or entertaine him in their houses. Let all good Subjects who have taken this Oath, open now at last their eyes, and acknowledge that the intentions of their Guides, was quite contrary to their professions.

The Sixt Article required every person to swear, That this cause touched the Glory of God, the happinesse of the three Kingdomes, and the dignity of the King. Indeed this cause touched the Glory of God with such fowle hands, as have defiled it as much as possible men could, and it touched the happinesse of the three Kingdomes with such malignant clawes, as have torn them to pieces. But if they will that we take them in their sense, namely that their Cause defends and advanceth the glory of God, the happinesse of the Kingdomes; and the dignity of the King, we behold and feel the contrary; But grant that this should be true, tis not a thing for which we must swear. Oathes are of two sorts; The one sort are to affirm affirme the truth of a thing present or past, the other for to promise and oblige our will for the future, these two sorts of Oathes cannot be taken together.

The Oath of the Covenant is of the latter ; & therefore it is very ill done of them to confound it with the first, which is altogether of another nature and usuage, and in a promise for the future ; to thrust in an affirmation of a thing present, yea of a thing false, or at least doubtfull, and whereof they of their party are not accorded.

But suppose that this Oath were of the first sort, the things which we should affirm upon Oath, are such as require the Testimony of the Person who swears : Such are all questions of Fact. But as for questions of Right, they ought nor neither can they be decided by Oath ; and it is to want common sense, to make his neighbour judge, to know which is the true Religion, and to judge whether the Cause of the Parliament is better then the Kings. There the Oath loseth his use, for its made to perswade and give Authority to the Thing, by the witnessse of the Person. If the Cause of the Covenant be the Cause of God, there is no need to swear it, but to justify it by reason and practice. And although we should even believe that it searcheth and advanceth the Glory of God, the happinesse of the Kingdome, and dignity of the King, it were unjust and ridiculous, to presse us to swear it ; For Morall Truths, and even also Theological, ought to be be'lieved not sworn. Civil things one'y, and those amongst them which are

are matters of Fact, ought onely to be affirmed by Oath ; we have a very firm belief of the truth of many points of Religion, and of the honesty of divers Persons, and yet nevertheless, for all the world, we would not swear to them ; all who have any ingenuity, or good sense acknowledge, that to force us to affirm the goodnesse of the Covenant by Oath, is an extream tyranny, and full of ignorance and absurdities. And also seeing we are very ill satisfied of the goodnesse thereof, its another tyranny to make us swear to defend it ; and a most barbarous cruelty, to confiscate our possessions, and sequester our Ministers of their benefices, because they refuse to take so unreasonable an Oath, and yet all this was practised during the Presbyterian reign.

The Articles of the Covenant were assisted with a religious Prologue and Epilogue, full of Protestations of Zeal & Repentance, & therefore it was almost impossible, but the most part of them that took it should be perjured, considering the generality of the People are evil. And this should have prevented the Gentlemen to impose the Covenant indifferently upon all, under such great penalties. For as they will not suffer the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to be administered to the People, for fear to encrease their condemnation ; They should have by the same reason, according to their Principles, have withheld to administer these Protestations of Zeal and Repentance, to their Consciences, whose disposition they were ignorant of.

and

and evil Faith, consists in their Protestations of Sanctity and superlative expressions of Zeal; in which the Independent party who rejected the Covenant without comparison, fly higher than their predecessors; All their Ordinances, and Declarations, yea even their Letters of News, were sallies of Zeal. All their murders and Robberies were to establish the purity of the Gospel, to conquer a Kingdome for Jesus Christ, and that godlinesse might reign and flourish.

If they speak of the abominable parricide committed against their Sovereign, they say that God made bare the Arme of his holinesse, That the Lord is on their right hand, that he hath smote Kings in the day of his wrath, and that they may wash their feet in the blood of the ungodly. Thus they made their horrible crimes march disguised in termes of Scripture, and the Devil borrowed the language of the Spirit of God.

Whosoever shall well consider the use they made of the Scripture, and whereto they imployed their great shew of holinesse, shall find an Answer to the Question in the 50. Psal. 16. But to the wicked God saith, what hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth. Behold here the work of the Covenanters; They declare the Statutes of God, and take his Covenant into their mouthes, to put on Rebellion, the mask of Religion, and to invest themselves without trouble, of the Authority and Revenues of the Crown, the goods of the Church, and without suspicion to grope the purses of the People;

people ; For the outward shew of devotion, doth much amuse the assistants and gain their belief; For who can fear any evil from those who so piously invite them to Repentance and the Advancement of the glory of God ? who would not confide and trust in them that declare the Statutes of God, and take his Covenant in their mouth ? Satan in all Formes is dangerous, but he is never so pernicious as when he clothes himself as an Angel of light, and it is ill going Procession when the Devil carries the Crosse.

Moreover by their fruits ye shall know them. How often abused they the credulity of the People, when they Conjured them to help to fetch the King from his evil Councillours, and to bring him gloriously to his great and faithfull counsel, that is to say to themselves, but their faithfulness appeared then when he departed from them, whom they called his evil Councillours, to yeeld himself up to them ; for then their terrible mennaces against him, & all those who should dare to receive him, forced this poor Prince to travel disguised in great danger of his life through their Armies which besieged Oxford, and to go and cast himself into the Armes of the Scots, as a chased Boar casts himself into the toiles.

He found by sad experience in this his miserable refuge, that the Covenanters were of the same Genius in other Nations, and of the same evil Faith. It imports not much whether it be true or false, which was said of the Scots, that they had secretly invited him, and promised to expose both their goods and lives

for his defence and safety, but how ever it was they were bound by their naturall duty to do so ; But instead of rendring him the duties of faithfull subjects, as Crafty Marchants they made their profit of him, for after they had kept him Captive some moneths, at length they drew two great benefits by him, the one, upon their promise to employ their Armies for his service, they made use of his authority, to make that miracle of valour and fidelity, the Marquis of Montrosse, the Kings Lieutenant in their Country, and the Terror of the Rebels, to disband, and lay down his Armes ; the other in making sale of his Majesty, to the Gentlemen at Westminster, for two hundred thousand pounds sterling in ready money, oblidging them to pay the like summe more two yeares after. Upon which this most wise Prince ; being demanded whether he had rather continue with his Scottish subjects, or go to his subjects in England, answered with an excellent grace and serenity, Without question, I must be with those who have bought me, and not with those who have sold me : And in his meditation upon this subject, Since I am thus sold by them, I am onely afflicted for the evil they have done, and to behold my selfe valued at a higher price, then my Saviour. These words proceeding from a quick and well governed Spirit, a King of his passions, and so conforming himself to the passion and obedience of the Son of God, cannot be heard, nor read by good Christians with the same moderation they were pronounced ; but this Magnanimous patience, should produce

duce in every pious soul, a most just execration of this the most base and Barbarous Treachery, that hath been committed since that of Judas, and which in iniquity yields onely to the abominable paracide, to whom he was deliver'd by this Infamous sale.

It matters not much what is said hereupon, that the Scots in delivering up the person of the King to the Gentlemen at Westminster, drew from them a promise to treat him with safety, liberty and honour; for they ought not impose upon other then themselves, this duty which was naturall to them. Neither could they expect that the English should render him that safety, liberty and honour, which themselves refused him, or that the buyers should not as well search to make their profit by him, as the sellers, and to reimburse themselves with usury by his ruine.

But for their care they took of the King when they deliver'd him, let us do them the favour to passe by their perfidiousnesse, and behold how the Gentlemen at Westminster performed their promise to treat the King with safety, liberty, and honour. Behold how they led him captive to Holmby house, where they set a guard of Souldiers, his enemies upon him, denyed him his Revenews rights, liberty, children, servants, and (that which with greate earnestnesse he desired) his Chaplins, and the free exercise of his conscience, extreemly misusing him with insolent threatnings and injurious demands.

And

And for all this the Scots never seemed to be moved or troubled, whilst the King was in the Presbyterian parties custody : But when the Independants had seised upon his person , although his captivity was a little sweetned over it was before , The Scotch began to demand aloud the accomplishment of their promises for his liberty , whereupon the Gentlemen at Westminster made a Declaration , to break and null all their former promises of Loyalty , and respect made to his Majesty by this Parliament , Telling the Scots , that these promises were formed, published , and employd according as the State of affaires , then stood , but they might now be altered , and yet nevertheless these promises to preserve the person Husbands and authority of the King had been made with the in his solemnest and sublimest protestations , We protest book of ( say they ) in the presence of Almighty God , Declarations which is the strongest bond of a Christian and the p. 557 and publique faith , the most solemn that any State 663. can give, that neither adversity nor successe shall ever cause us to change our resolutions. Now at this day it sadly appears how much they respect the presence of Almighty God , and how much they find themselves obliged by the strongest obligation of a Christian , and the publique faith, the most solemn that the body of an estate can give. It is to be doubted , whether they beleeve there is a God, or that he is Almighty , or so just as to call them before him in Judgment for the Prophanation of his most holy name.

Before these Gentlemen did openly manifest that they would not grant the King neither

neither liberty, Honour, nor safety, they set a work their Hypocrisie and treachery. The Independant Army having taken away the person of the King from the Presbyterians, began to use him more honorably, but not out of love to him; But in hatred to his former Jaylours, and to flatter and lull asleep the Royall party, and for this effect this Army made some Declarations in favour of his Majesty, See here some of their expressions.

Forasmuch as a scandalous information hath been presented to the two houses, importing that his Majesty is kept prisoner amongst us, and uncivilly and barbarously dealt with, we Judge our selves bound to declare that this suggestion and all other of the same nature are most false and absolutely contrary; not onely to our requests, but also to our principles. And a little after, we professe openly that we see not how there can be any firme, or durable peace in the Kingdome, without a due consideration and provision for the rights, repose & immunities of his Majesty and his Royall Family. And in another place they promise; That untill such time as there be made a settlement, his Majesty shall find amongst them all civil and personall respect, with all reasonable Freedome.

But let us next see how they performed this promise, after they found this great Prince inflexible to all their unjust and dishonourable propositions, and especially to those which concerned the ruine of the Church, they restrained his liberty, and set over him more insolent guards in his house at Hampton Court, at which neverthelesse—who was then in effect chief of the League seemed to be much troubled, and very carefull of the life of his Majesty, and therefore perswaded him to escape by night, and to save himself out of such wicked hands into the Ile of Wight; for being resolved to charge the King with a Criminall proceffe, which was the way as he thought most proper for the designes of his Ambition, then privately to make him away; but he durst not proceed thus farre, whilst the King was so neer the gates of London, and in the heart of his Kingdome, the hearts whereof he possessed. I will not undertake, to sound the Mysteries of iniquity of this Agent of Satan, but shew you a piece of his perfidioufnesse and profound hypocrisie.

The night before the King stole from Hampton Court— Came to visit him, causing all persons to withdraw out of the Chamber, except Major Huntington, in whom he onely confided, and taking the King aside, had a long discourse with him, which Huntington could not hear, but could well behold his passionate gesture, which witnessed a singular freedom and affection.——At his departure cast himselfe upon his knees, and took the King by the hand, kissing it manytimes wetting it with his tears, and at length lifting up his voice said to him, Sir, so God blesse me and my children, as I am resolved to endeavour to place you and your children in your rights and dignities, after this approaching to Huntington, Major (saith he) tarry with the K k
King,

King, and if there happen any thing new this night, take a good horse and come with all speed and acquaint me. This night then the King passed secretly the Thames, and taking post, cast himself into the trap, they had laid for him in that retired place; so soon as Huntington knew of the departure of the King, and whether he was gone, he went in all hast to give advice to——that the King had escaped into the Ile of Wight,——beholding him astonished and amazed at this suddain change, laughed at him, telling him, that the King was there where he desired, and that there wanted nothing now to the satisfying of his desires, but that all his children were there with him. This History is attested by Huntington himself, a person of Credit and repute, whose eyes this Action, and the like hath opened, and turned his heart towards the King his Sovereign.

Now the King being confined into this little Island, where all the avenues might easily be kept by the Creatures of——and the other Gentlemen of the Covenant; the Mask was presently taken off at Westminster, and in the Army, and all their Oaths and Protestations to maintain the person and authority of the King, were changed into loud cries in calling for Justice against him, to which the Gentlemen at Westminster easily condescended, and for this effect declared him incapable to Govern, charged him with all the crimes malice could devise; forbidding all persons to make any more addressees to him: But in this fair way they had some disturbance, by those those parties that in the year, 1648, rose for the King, but God justly provoked against this sinfull Nation, suffer'd injustice to triumph, through the disloyalty of persons who having untill that time borne Armes against the King, took part with him expressly to betray and ruine him.

And thus from the beginning to the end of this Tragedy, falshood hath plaid his part; and at length this just Prince lost his life by the hands of those his subjects, who had called heaven and earth to witnesse their Loyalty and affection; and this is very admirable and memorable to all ages how the conscience and constancy of the King took a way altogether contrary to that of the Covenanters, for whilst the Covenanters swore themselves to destroy him, he would do neither the one, nor the other to save his life, or Crown; for its manifest that there was a time, wherein if the King would have promised that which he was resolved not to have kept, he had in a short time been put into such a Condition (according to all humane Appearances) as would have put him out of the power of all the discontented to constrain him to have kept his promise.

But let us consider other Acts of the evil faith of the Covenanters. How have the members of Parliament answered the intentions of those that sent them? Was it the desire of those Countries and places for which they served, that the Divine Service so much loved by the people, should be taken away, and their Ministers driven from their benefices;

fices, and Anabaptists and such like, without knowledge, and call, established in their places? Did they give them Commission to levy and make a warre against their King, to cut off his head? And were they not sent and deputed to Councell and advise the King, and to succour their Counties? And have not they done the Contrary? when their fellow Citizens chose them, did they chuse them to be their Sovereignes? Was it their intentions that they should sit in Parliament to perpetuity, and place in their children to perpetuate their Raigne in their Families? Whereby they have gained more in a few years then the House of Austria, which hardly in two hundred years of an Elective Empire, have made one successive; for these people have in a few years turned into succession an Empire, in which they have no Election. And it would be very hard to tell, who gave them the power to dispose of the goods, and lives of the people, and to Govern the Kingdom by an Army, of which England hath never hope to be delivered, but by an absolute Victory obtained by the King. Of these high Actions of presumption and Tyranny, warranted by no Authority, and upheld only by the strength of Armes, they must render account to God, and since they maintain that the Sovereignty resides in the people, they must also one day give an account to the people of their administration.

They made an ordinance, that no member of Parliament should exercise any office in the State; but how well did they keep it? Did

Did they not make amongst themselves a Monopoly of all the gainfull offices ? they gave out, they would give an account of the treasure extended of the State, but in the meane while they followed the Councell of Pericles, which was to Study how never to give any.

They invited the people to present their complaints against their own members, but those who dared to do it were ruined in the prosecution, and served as a sad example to all others to beware and keep themselves from so dangerous an enterprize for the future.

They have also forced the consciences of men to break their faith, witness the breach of Articles subscribed in the Counties of York, and Chester, whereby the Gentlemen engaged on both parties, were mutually obliged to lay down their Armes and live in peace, but the Gentlemen at Westminster frightened with this Hideous name of peace, declared this accord Null, as destructive to their affaires, for both the devil and the Covenanters maintain themselves by dissension.

They forced the Londiners, taken and released by the King at the Battell of Brainford, to take up Armes against him the second time, against their faith sworne to his Majesty, who most graciously gave them both their lives and liberty, releasing them without any Ransome.

But as for them they wickedly massacred those who yeilded themselves upon their promise

mise of life, and liberry, as Duke Hamilton, the Earl of Holland, and the gallant and noble Lord Capel, Sir Charles Lucas, Sir George Lisle, and many others.

They being thus habituated in disloyalty and unfaithfullnesse, their great quarrel against the late King of blessed and glorious memory, was that he would not break his Faith, nor falsifie his Oath he took at his Coronation, to maintaine the Rights and Priviledges of the Church, and to defend the Lawes of the Land.

And as they were perfidious to us, so were they also to one another; they falsified their Faith to their Army, which had too well fought for them, under the Command of the Earl of Essex, and disbanded them without their pay.

But another Army paid them for this perfidiounesse by another. The Independent Troops were those which professed to them fidelity with the greatest zeal; And these were they which unroosted them at Westminster, and pull the Gentlemen out of their Thrones, leaving there, onely such as pleased them.

And in passing, let us mark another feat of activity, of ——— he perswaded the House of Commons to Casheere this Army, promising them that he would lay down his Armes at their feet, but he gave them this Counsell onely for to provoke and irritate the Army against them, and to ruine them, as indeed it did.

Then

Then when the Army began to present Criminall informations against the King, they sent an Embassie of six Collonels to the House of Lords to keep them quiet, promising to maintain their Priviledge of Peerage, but as soon as the King was beheaded, they Casheered the House of Lords, and those Lords having basely abandoned their Head to the slaughter, presently lost the life of Honour, which flowed from thence upon them, and were most justly laid aside as dead and unprofitable members.

The Scots also for having been too faithfull to their Brethren in Rebellion, were paid with the like treachery, for all that power and interest, which they ought to have had in the affaires of both Kingdomes, according to the Articles of their League, was denied them with scorn and insultation.

Amongst our miseries, this is a recreative spectacle to us, to behold the Theeves who pillaged us, to pillage and rob one another, and to deal treacherously amongst themselves after they betray'd us.

To their disloyalty let us joyn their falsehood, wherein consisted the Foundation and Building of all their Fabrick. This appeared singularly in the beginnings of the Covenant. Then the Gentlemen discovered daily some Treason or other, with as much facility as the Labourer findes his work.

News of England, written from Spain, France, Italy, Denmark, Politick Discourses of a Dutch Marriner, to an English Hostler; of Armies kept under ground by the King, to cut the Throats of all the Protestants in a night, and the greatest danger of all, which caused the chiefest fear, to the subtil spirits of London, was a designe layd for a mine of Powder, under the Thames, to cause the River to drown the City; But this dangerous enterprize was discovered a little before the Execution, whereupon the devout People very conscientiously, gave thanks to God, and they took speciall order for the future that the Thames should not be blown up. In two or three monerhs these Treasons amounted to the number of nine and thirty, according to the account of a venerable Member of the House of Commons in one of his speeches. This indeed was the time they had most need of them to form a Party.

They made use of the same path according to their Occasions, after a defeat, they used to keep a day of Thanksgiving for a Victory, if the King offered Peace to his Subjects, they gave out amongst the People, that he refused it, and would have none, and the Ministers told God of it in their publick Prayers, with all the news of the Times, that he might have no cause to pretend ignorance. To draw money from the People, a plot would be discovered, for which publick Thanks was to be given to God, & afterwards the Londoners must pay a hundred thousand pounds Sterling in acknowledgement of so great a Benefit. By these plots which were onely against their Purfes, the People were often pillaged, yet they had not

not the wisdom to beware of them. The Devil having sent amongst them such strong delusions, that they should believe a lye Certainly this Device or Motto should have been written upon the Standards of the Covenanters.

Possuimus in fallacia latibulum nostrum, & mendacio protecti sumus. We have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid our selves ; Isa. 28.
 but this covering will not long continue, For the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, 15.
saith the Prophet, and that which is builded thereon shall fall as an house built upon the sand. Verf. 17.

And thus much for them who boast of their Publick Faith, and say they dare not trust their King.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of the Instruments both Parties made use of; and of the Irish affairs.

LET us now come to the accusation which made the lowdest noise: Our enemies reproached the King, that he made use of wicked Instruments, for beholding to their great regret; that the person of the King was without blame, they cast all the sins of his Court and Armies upon him: But we will see what Instruments the two Parties served themselves with, and whether the consideration of the Instruments, can alter the Nature of the Cause.

But first of all let us make our advantage of that which our Enemies are forced to yield us, for Envy which tare a pieces those who served the King, found nothing to fasten on, in his person, yea though continually endeavour'd, even after his death, when the Covenanters entertained, and yet dorth, Writers in pay, to write scandalous and defamatory Libels against his sacred Majesty.

There was never Rebel which called not his Prince unjust, otherwise they would condemn their own party of injustice; But the open conversation of the King was a subject very improper, either for the detracter or flatterer; he lived not obscure and hidden as the Kings of China, but made appear to the eyes of all the World what he was, as the Sunne makes makes himself seen to the Universe by his own proper light.

This Prince whom the Covenanters persecuted under colour of Piety and Reformation, was four times a day upon his knees at his devotion, was guided by the fear of God, and comforted by his Love, made his Word the Rule of his belief and actions, humbled himself in his adversities under his mighty hand, and reposed himself with a firm Faith upon the same hand which smote him. His discourses were honest, religious, pertinent, and judicious, and his Writings were the same; wherein shined forth a vigor and Majesty truly Royall. And the sanctity of his retired Meditations, which are now publick, will for ever fill all good souls with consolation and instruction, and his enemies with Confusion. He was a Prince sober, continent, temperate, a spirit composed by singular Geometry, so equal in all his inclinations, that it is hard to say, to which passion he was most inclined.

Greatnesse armes vices with power, and tempts the desires by the facility; and the Devil hath his Agents in the Courts of Princes who observe and watch their humours, and advertise them of all the evil they may do; for to resist such trials one had need of a Soul wherein Nature and Grace had contributed to strengthen against such temptation; this our Prince shewed by his behaviour, that he believed there could be no pleasure where there was sin, Abhorring that which was evil, cleaving to that which was good. The Councillours of

vice

vice had here assayed in vain, all which might move youth or power ; If in any thing he manifested passion, it was in favouring Virtue, Knowledge and Arts, which he loved by judgement and experience.

The injustice they are able to reproach him with, is that which he committed against himself, having taken from his own Rights to preserve and augment those of his subjects. It were to be wished for their good, that he had lesse loved them, and himself a little more, for if he had given them lesse, they would have had more then they have at this day.

Of his Clemency, none can speak more then his Enemies, for his greatest adversaries were those who were the principal subjects of it. He preserved the lives of those who purchased his destruction; He restored the Inheritances to the Children of them, which ravishd and took from him his own, and who died with their swords in their hands against him, he offered a free pardon to them who would not pardon him. But if this way hath not gained their Affections, doubtlesse it hath Gods.

Certainly since they have rejected and destroyed their good King, they deserve God should give them such Masters, like the King of the Frogs in the Fable, Storks and Herons which should devour them and consume them one after another ; but if he doth not , I fear there will be such good order amongst them, that they will mutually devour one another, there being no tyranny so cruel as that

Behold here then a great point gained, That the King was a juſt and good Prince. Thoſe who ſo much complain of his evil counſellours or inſtruments, ought to love him ſo much the more, and to acknowledge that he could find no inſtruments like himſelf; there is no mallady in the body of State which is not curable, whiſt the head is ſound in all Kingdomes; The injuſtice committed in the Courts of judicature, is done in the Name of the King, and there is no Government ſo juſt and prudent, no even that which is governed by a Prophetically conduct, as that of  Davids , which have not faults enough, to give occaſion to an  Abſalom , to ſay,  Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any ſuit or cauſe, might come unto me, and I would do him juſtice.  2 Sam. 15. 4.

In publick grievances, good ſubjects are wont to caſt the blame upon the Miniſters of State, and reſt ſatiſfied, in ſeeing ſome of them puniſhed, accounting it their principall intereſt to preſerve the honour of their Sovereign; and good Princes, when they are informed, that the Miniſters of State, have abuſed their Authority to the damage of their ſubjects, which is theirs; are wont to examine them, and judge them according to the Laws. And in this the King did as much as poſſible they could require of him, having ſubmitted the perſons of thoſe whom the Covenanters complained againſt, to be judged and and tried by lawfull and ordinary wayes ; But whilst they tread under foot the Royal Authority, the Power of Parliament, and the Majesty of the Lawes, and that they were in open warre against him, what reason had he to submit his Servants and Ministers to the judgement of his enemies ? Being certaine that whilst the Warre continued, they would aime most at them who served him best.

Then when the Parliament was whole and entire, there passed a vote worthy the gravity of that great Court ; That the King could do no wrong, and that his Officers, and not he, were guilty of the evil which was done in the publick Government ; But since those who loved the King departed, and withdrew themselves to him ; those which remained at Westminster, followed a way quite contrary, for they cast upon the King, all the faults of his servants, and made use of them against him, whom they ought and should have punished for having ill served him. Then when they took in hand to Examine the Ministers of State, in stead of punishing them which were guilty, they received them into favour, yea after their faults proved against them, and turned all the discontent of the people upon the King, what a great noise was there in the house of Commons against the forgers of Monopolies ; one would have thought, that hardly any should have escaped with their lives, but there hapned altogether the contrary ; For because the Monopolists and other accused persons, made a considerable number in Parliament, they made use of their faults, to make a strong

faction against the King, terrifying and making them understand, there was no way left to preserve them from utter ruine but to joyne with the new party which was forming, and hereupon they were promised impunity for what evils they had done, on condition they should do greater.

Some of these were sent to the King to Newmarket, in the behalf of their companions, to whom his Majesty said these words, capable to convert them, or to make their inditement at the Day of Judgement.

Gentlemen, lay your hands upon your Consciences, Who are they which invented those Taxes by which you have so provoked my people against me? For whose advantage and profit were these imposts levied? were my revenues increased by them? It was you that induced and moved me to them, for your own particular profit, and now you return me a worthy recompence.

Other Parliament men, Guilty of many crimes were kept in the Parliament in hope of impunity, the holy Covenant was a Garment which cover'd a multitude of sins, even to the violating of a great Lady, and abusing her by one of their members, almost in the sight of the Parliament; Behold these, the Reformers of Church and State; others which were not of the Parliament, but under censure, for having been Councillours, or instruments in the imposts and Taxes of the people, were released by them, and employed for the same business, as persons who well understood the Trade, who pillaged then with a good conscience, for the advancement ment of the Kingdome of Jesus Christ; those whose Infamous life, was the shame of the Royal Court, were the Honour of the Court at Westminster, and the Pillars of the Covenant. Likewise the Judges accused of corruption, and the Ministers of a scandalous life, in taking the Covenant, obtained a plenary indulgence of all their sins, for after that there was no more to say to them, for those who washed themselves in this water, returned as white as if they had been washed with Inke, or with the second Baptisme the Anabaptists use at this Day.

But now let us look upon the Armies: Our enemies cry aloud, that the King made use of those of the Church of Rome, to serve him in his Warres. Upon which an excellent Writer makes this gentle Question to them. How many were in their Armies, or how many they would have had? for if the common report do not much wrong them, they employed divers persons of that Religion; there were persons of honour and quality, who assured us, that they prisoners of the same Religion, served the Covenanters. We refer our selves to their own Consciences; if they gave not a Commission to my Lord Aston to leavy forces.

The relation is notable, the King being at York, this gallant man, accounted the most experienced, and best Commander of Warre of his time, came to present his service to his Majesty, the King gave him thanks, and withall told him he was resolved to employ none of his Religion in his Army. Well

(saith he) I will go then to those who will imploy me, and indeed, went presently to Westminster, where he was received with open Armes, and a Commission given him written and signed, which he carried to the King; Ye cannot wonder then, that the King made use of him, and others of his Religion, whom before he was resolved not to employ, although he had, to take away all shadow of occasion from his enemies, who sought something whereat to quarrel with him, made a Proclamation that none professing the Religion of the Church of Rome should come neer his Court.

After this the Covenanters used all their power to make them draw to the Kings party, well considering their party being so small would bring more hatred then help to the King, and for this effect they treated them with great inhumanity, forcing them to forsake their Houses, and Lands, and runne and hide themselves under the Kings protection, and this the King could not refuse them, for as they owed him their subjection, the King owed them his protection, so long as they governed themselves according to the Laws, and accomplished the Conditions whereby they were permitted by Act of Parliament to live in the Kingdome.

By this reason of Reciprocall duty, the King protecting them as his subjects, they were bound to defend him as their King, and yea shall not find in all the Statutes which concern them, that they are exempted to serve the King in his Armies, neither is it reasonable that they onely should be free from the perills of warre, whilst their fellow subjects venture their lives, and are shedding their blood for the defence of their Country.

The Covenanters made it appear sufficiently to the world, that they Judged that Religion ought not to exclude any from bearing Armes in the publique danger, for in their Armies they made use of all Religions, yea that of the Church of Rome, as we shall shew hereafter. If it were lawfull for them to make use of those who denyed the incarnation of Jesus Christ, and of others that denyed his Divinity, and those who were Rebaptized and denyed Baptisme to Infants, and the blessed Sacrament of the whole Church, it were not lesse Lawfull for the King to make use of Souldiers of the Roman Religion, and if those whom they now call Reformed, embrace the Doctrine of the Jesuits touching the deposing and murthering of Kings, and that persons of the Roman Religion reject this, and joyne themselves with the Reformed Church in this point, the King had reason to serve himself of the Last, as well as of the First.

Moreover the King had but two Religions in his Armies, which were too many; And although the Roman is not tollerated by the lawes, yet the Statutes give protection to the persons which make profession of it, but the Covenanters morly Army, consisted of many Religions, there can be no certain number of them, for they multiplied and subdivided daily;

daily ; And these Religions had no tolleration by the lawes, nor the persons which made profession of them.

But put the case that the Covenanters were a party Reformed ; uniforme and illuminated, since they have destroyed their King, what law Divine or Humane, doth hinder him for using all meanes that God gives him to defend himselfe ? And if amongst his Loyall subjects, there be some who are blinded in matter of Religion, why should he not make use of those who are blind to repress those who are illuminated, and maintain his life and his Crown.

'Tis then a Ridiculous question, which they demand of the King, whether he will defend the Reformed Religion with Souldiers of the Roman Religion, for he makes not use of them to defend his Religion, but his person and scepter, which those whom they call Reformed, would wickedly pluck out of his hands. 'Tis foolishly and unjustly done of them to complain that the King made them to kill the Protestants, a name which they make a great noise with, when they have lost the thing; they were not Protestants, but rebels whom the King killed in his just defence. The King was not to enquire of what Religion they were that made warre upon him, the true Religion gives not license to malefactors to do evil, and to binde the hands of the Judge, that he should not punish them; chiefly, when the malefactor fights against the Judge, and he to whom God hath committed the sword to execute vengeance in wrath, is constrained to make use of it to defend his life and authority; the malefactor who is instructed in a holy Religion is doubly Guilty, he is the evil servant in the Gospel; who knows his Masters will, but does it not, and therefore he shall be beaten with many stripes.

This above written serves as an answer to the exclamations of our enemies, that the King caused an Army of Irish Papists to come over to kill the Protestants in England, for it matters not what Religion the English be of, if they be Rebels, and who can blame him for employing Rebels converted, against Rebels obstinate, but onely those that perish by them: But that which gives occasion of laughter in this objection, is that there were none, and that the Irish have not yet sent over their Army into England, according to their promise to help the King. We grant that the English are farre more considerable to the King then the Irish, suppose the difference be as great as betwixt a Son and a servant, but if the Son prove unnatural and draws his sword against his Father, who can blame the Father if he armes his Servant, were he a Barbary slave, to defend his life? 'Tis not to purpose then for them, so often to object to us, that the Irish were the Executioners to cut the Throats of a multitude of Protestants in Ireland, and that it's a horrible thing to bring them over into England to do as much here; For at the worst they were but executioners of Rebels; Certainly civil warre is a horrible thing where one destruction draws on another; Abyssus

abyſſam advocat; but ſince the enraged and implacable obſtinacy of the Covenanters, brought the King to this extreimity, that he could not quench the fire that they had kindled in his Kingdome, but by ruine; like thoſe who would quench a Town all in flames with Cannon ſhot, what could we do other then call in the Irish to his ſuccours? having rebellions then on all ſides? Was it not wiſely done of him to make an agreement with the moſt tractable and pliant, and to ſerve himſelf with their forces, to make head againſt the others? If the English would not have had the King made peace with the Irish, why did they then reſuſe the peace and pardon which the King ſo often, and ſo graciouſly rendred them? And did he enter into treaty with his Irish Subjects, before he had a long time in vaine ſolicited his English to their duty? Should he rather willingly have loſt two Kingdoms to help his enemies to render themſelves Maſters of the third?

But ſay they, the Irish ſhed abundance of Proteſtants blood in Ireland, which ſhould have been revenged inſtead of granting them peace. It's true, they committed many fearful and ſtrange cruelties, but this blood hath been ſufficiently revenged; For, for one which they put to death, five of theirs have been killed ſince the beginning of the warre; And moreover this reaſon ſounds ill in the mouthes of Chriſtians, who ought to leave vengeance to God. We could not expect that the Covenanters would ever commend this peace, which might have been ſo diſadvantageous to them, and might have supplied the King with many souldiers, if the Irish had kept their word.

The principall reason of their complaint was, because the Londoners lost much hereby, for they had advanced great summes of monies to the two Houses, for which they were to have had the Irish Rebels lands after they were extirpated; which was to buy the Beares skin before he was killed; and this partly was the cause of breaking up of the Treaty at Uxbridge, for the Citizens of London would by no means hear of peace, unlesse the King would break his faith wth the Irish, & root them out; for the quarrel that the English Covenanters had with them was not for their Religion, or Rebellion, but because they would not suffer themselves to be killed in a peaceable and quiet manner, that thereby the Merchant Adventurers of London, might have their Bargaine. And thus the Covenanters as much as in them lay, justified the unjust armes of the Irish, since they would by no meanes have peace with them: And after all, the King hath the sole power of peace and warre, and if he will receive into grace, and pardon his subjects who have offended him, he is to give account to none. Yet nevertheless that it may appear to all the Reformed Churches how much our good King departed, loved his Religion, he would not grant peace to his Irish subjects, on the conditions they demanded, advantageous to their Religion; Which if he had accorded, he might have had legions instead of Regiments, and not wanted neither the help of his Subjects

jects, nor their neighbours : but rather then he would buy their assistance at that price, he choose to sink and fall under the oppression of the Covenanters ; after this piety or humanity ought to have converted the enemies of the King, if he had had to do with persons who had either the one or the other. But if the Gentlemen at London lost their moneys which they advanced upon the Irish affaires, they have cause to complain of the Gentlemen at Westminster, who made use of this money, not to reconquer Ireland, but to make warre upon the King, who had a great desire to terminate that businesse, and would have gone in person, but not to serve the avaricious and barbarous intentions of these Merchants of blood, but to recover his rights, and to restore a number of his exiled subjects to their possessions ; Those ruined and remaining families of the generall massacre, cried aloud in the ears of the King and Parliament. For to help them there was a generall Collection through the Kingdome, and the Ministers, by Order of Parliament were to excite the charity of the people to a liberall contribution, which was done, and great sums of money were raised for the Irish warre. But to what was the charity of many pious souls emploied ? to make warre against the King ; The Armies which the cries of the poor exiled Irish had raised, and were ready at their Port to be shipped, were called back, and conducted against his sacred Majesty ; and although many in those Troops had their interests in Ireland, they were constrained to forsake them, for unknown

Interests, and an open hostility, against their Sovereign. Tis no wonder then, if part of those Troops at the Battail of Keilton, turned to the King; and took a bloody revenge of so great injustice. For what a most horrible tyranny was this, to make them fight against their King in England, whilest the throates of their wives and children were cutting in Ireland?

We earnestly beseech the Covenanters, that whensoever they curse the Irish Rebellion, they would remember these two things; the one, that the Scots shewed them the way, having before made a Covenant for Religion, and levied Armes to maintaine it, and obtained by this way, all that they desired. The Irish seeing this was the way to obtain the liberty of their Religion, presently followed the example of their Neighbours, and as a judicious Writer saith pleasantly; That if the Scots had not piped the Irish had never danced.

Let them remember also, that the Irish, as wicked as they were, had without comparison more reason for their rising, then either the English or Scotch, for it's most certaine that the Irish were held in with a bridle, which had a ruder bit then the other subjects of the King. Many of the Irish for their former Rebellions were dispossessed of their Lands; and although the sentence was just, the losse neverthelesse was sensible; moreover they had not the free exercise nor liberty of their Religion, the English nor Scotch, cannot alledge any thing like these. Hardly shall you find in any History a Raign of fifteen years more flourishing, peaceable, able, and mild, then the fifteen first yeares of the reign of the late King, notwithstanding all the grievances the Covenanters reckon up to his disadvantage; There never shined more happy dayes upon England and Scotland; In effect they were Nations sick of too much ease. When Subjects undertake to criticise upon mysteries of State, and come to quarrell amongst themselves for subtilties of Religion or points of Discipline, its a symptome of an easie yolk, and of excesse of ease and prosperity.

Moreover the Irish fought against men of another Religion, and of another Nation, they fought not against the person of their King, cut not the Throats of their Brethren, nor ruined those of their profession; imposed not necessity of Conscience upon others; but only demanded publick liberty of Conscience for themselves, although many amongst them contented themselves with lesse; For by the Articles of peace in September, 1646. the King gave them no tolleration for the publick exercise of their Religion; Certainly therefore as those of Nineveh shall rise up in judgement against the Scribes and Pharisees, so shall the Irish against the English and Scotch Covenanters.

Further, our enemies are very unjust to complain, that the King assailed to bring over Irish Armies into England, since they in effect a year and half before had brought Armies of Scotch into England to serve them. If they take the boldnesse to entertaine the Armies of strangers within the Kingdome of their Sovereign, veraign, shall it not be lawfull for the King to defend his person and Kingdome with his own Subjects, which in this quality are not strangers in respect of him, but the Scotch are strangers in regard of the English. Histories furnish nought paralell to this crime, to have brought the Scotch into England, and to move them to come, gave them part of the Kingdome of Ireland ; but its easie for them to give that which was none of theirs ; with the same right the Devil offered to Jesus Christ all the Kingdomes of the world, for they can produce their Authority no other where.

This Nation abounding in men, living in a barren Countrey , will be easily induced to plant Colonies in a more fertile soyl, and who will believe that having their weapons in their hands, and being in England , backed with their forces from Scotland, they will govern themselves at the devotion of those that sent for them, and go no further then they are commanded; there is danger least it happen as to the fountain of Lucian, which a student in magick, with certain words he had learn'd of his master sent to fetch water, to w<sup>ch</sup> the fountain obeyed, but the poor apprentice knew not the words to make it stay , which in the mean while went and fetched water without ceasing, till it filled the house up to the windowes. Certainly our mutineers had the wit to make the Scotch come to their help, and there needed no great charme to perswade a people which had nothing, and had nothing to do, to come and fish in troubled waters in their neighbours pond ;

But

But I have great fear, that those which caused them to enter upon their march, were ignorant of the charm, to stay them that they should go no further, and that the Scotch will not have done when the English have done with them.

It was not then an action of judgement to cause the Scots to enter England, without having power to make them return and to hinder their coming againe, much lesse an action of piety, for God needs not the wickednesse of men to advance his Kingdome, it was an action purely of spight and stomack, a stroak of despair, proceeding from persons resolved to destroy their Countrey with them, rather then to suffer the insultation of a Conquerour, or the reproach of their treachery ; But in doing this they have rather augmented their reproach, and drawn upon themselves perpetuall infamy ; For as long as there is a God in heaven, and Conscience in the world, the memory of those, who had but a finger in so base an action will be hatefull to all good men, their names will offend their eares, and their posterity will be forced ( if any remaine ) to change their names for fear of being stoned by the publick.

But lets return to Ireland, and pour into the bosom of our enemies the objection they have so often pressed against his Majesty, that he invited Irish Papists over to his party ; and shew to the world, that it was the Covenanters, and not the King, who really employed them.

For to unwind this intrangled and intricate

businesse we must take the thred of the affair higher; ye must then know, that there are two sorts of Irish Papists, the one ancient inhabitants of the Countrey, who since the Conquest of Ireland bear an hereditary and irreconcilable hatred to the English, the other the posterity of those English Colonies which were planted in Ireland about four hundred years since, to preserve the Conquest for the English, and are accounted as English, by the ancient Inhabitants, for they yet preserve the language, manners, and inclination of the Country from whence they issued, the English and Scotch Protestants in Ireland are new Colonies, which during these fourty years of peace, have increased in number almost equall to the others.

When the Rebellion brake out in Ireland, soon after that in Scotland, being encouraged by their example, the old Irish and the old English Colonies joyned together in one common designe to establish the Roman Religion, whereupon the Gentlemen at Westminster in stead of suppressing them speedily by Armes, (which his Majesty desired, and offered to go in person) made an Ordinance wholly to extirpate them, to which the King would never consent, alledging that it would be a meanes to cause the Colony of Protestants in Ireland, who were without defence, to be extirpated; as it came to passe, for the Irish being provoked by that bloody Ordinance, did what they at Westminster had taught them, and extirpated the most part of the Protestant Colonies, killing man, woman and childe with most horrible

ble barbarousnesse, I leave to the just judgement of God to decide against whom this sea of innocent blood cries.

In this Butchery, the old Irish, were the most active and cruel, the others went along with them onely for company, and besides their interests were different, for the intention of the old English Colonies went little further then the designe of freeing themselves in matter of Religion, but the native Irish would as well be freed of the Nation, as have the freedom of their Religion, and would shake off the yoke of the English Monarchy, take possession in the name of the Pope, of the Abbies which were all in the hands of Lay men, recover all that they had lost by Confiscation, for their former Rebellions, and for this effect, null all Titles which held of the Crown.

This intention was contrary to the old English, who held all their Estates of the Crown, and possessed divers Abbies by pattent Royal, and besides this had an hereditary affection towards their King and ancient Countrey; and therefore they had reason to fear, that after the extirpation of the English Protestants, their Throats should be cut, and upon this consideration they listened to the overtures of an accord the King made to them, in the year 1643. And although they brake not off suddenly with the Old Irish, yet they loosed themselves by little and little, and in the end declared themselves for the King, but it was not untill a long while after they did him any service, having been amused and abused a long time time by the subtilties of Rome, who upheld and instructed the old Irish, for to passe into England and serve the King, if ever they had promised it, the same subtilties and their dissensions would never permit them to do.

No man of understanding or sence can blame the King to receive from them the service they owed him, neither did he ever make any profession to the contrary, as they at Westminster, who passed a Vote of extirpation against them, and stirred up the people against the King by this pretext; that he made use of persons, of the Roman Religion; now after this if they themselves shall make use of them, they are inexcusable before God and man.

But now let us see how their actions agree with their words and looks. The Royal party being greatly increased in Ireland, especially by the conversion of the Protestant forces which before served the Parliament; The Gentlemen of the Covenant finding themselves very low in that Kingdome, found no better expedient to repair their languishing affaires there, then to joyne their interest with the Popes, and the old Irishes, for its most notoriously known, that before the death of the King these Irish Papists took pay of the Parliament, and serve them in the warre, and have since rendred many good services to the holy Covenant, above all, before Derry, which the Covenanters held, but was besieged by the Scotch Royalists, and had been taken without the coming of the Irish, conducted by Owen Row O Neal, who forced the Scotch to raise the siege with a signal losse, when the besieged were in great distresse and ready to yeeld up the Town. And this conjunction endured near a year, for it was not till after October, 1649. that these Irish returned to the obedience of their King.

And indeed we have not here any thing to wonder at and be astonish'd, if two sorts of Rebels who agreed together to cast off their King, joyne themselves together in one party, and if their temporall interest which binds them be preferred before the spirituall, which both in the one and the other league, served but as a pretext to their covetousnesse and ambition, the Gentlemen at Westminster Judged right, that the advancement of the Pope in Ireland, was lesse disadvantagious to them, then the whole reduction of that Kingdome under the obedience of his Majesty.

This scandalous conjunction having much exasperated the spirits of the by-got people, whom they had taught to hate the King, because he had made peace with the Papists, and murderers of Ireland, the Gentlemen at Westminster, after they had a long time denied it, and seeing they could not any longer dissemble this infamous action, publickly called before them in examination, Colonell Monk, who was employ'd in this agreement, and demanded of him who caused him to make it, he being instructed before hand, answered that he had done it of himself, of his proper motion; then being enquired why he durst make such an accord without a Commission,

Commission, he answered, that he judged his agreement then profitable for the interests of his party; and hereupon he was dismissed and sent away without any punishment, and these Gentlemen condemned this accord and allyance by a publick Act.

But where is the man that is so simple as to be deceived by so sottish a force? But to undeceive the abused, and to shew that these Gentlemen gave no orders for to break this agreement; they had news a while after that great succours were put into this Garrison of Derry, (then the Covenanters) by the Troopes of his Holinesse; and then all the jugling was discovered; and there rested then no other answer for them to give but that of the Italian, who being exceedingly pained with the Gout, and having prayed to God and all the Saints, and yet found no ease, began to call and pray to the Devil for help, and gave this Reason to them that rebuked him for it, Ogni adjuto e bono, all help is good from whomsoever it come.

Now every man who shall compare their Protestations with their actions, may demand these questions with astonishment and horror. Are these the men who have so cried out against the murtherers, which massacred so many thousand Protestants? Are these they, who before and after the massacre, did so presse the King to signe their utter extirpation? are these those who rendred the King odious, onely for offering them peace and pardon? Are these the men that stirred up the people against their King, because he had some few souldiers of the Roman Religion scatterd here and there in his Armies, (for he never had an entire company of that Religion) and yet behold they themselves, entertain a great body of an Army of the most refined Papists, and the most violent enemies of the Reformed Religion, to whom (when the King treated with them) he refused to give them any tolleration. Behold the Army of the Popes become the Parliaments, behold the murderers whom they would have rooted out, become their Souldiers; Behold the revenge of the blood of their brethren which they made such a noise of. The Massacre of the Protestants is pardoned the murderers, provided they massacre those that remain of them. Is it to pay the Armies of his holiness, that such great summes of money are raised of the Protestants, and that they suck the poor families even to the very marrow? Is this the effect of so many solemn professions, of so many fasts and publick humiliations for the establishment of the Gospel in Ireland? Where is their shame? where is their ingenuity? where is their conscience? be confounded infamous hypocrites, and since ye cannot hereafter avoid the execration of men, endeavour to prevent by your repentence the Judgement of God upon your impostures.

CHAP. XXIII.

How the different factions of the Covenant agreed to ruine the King, and contributed to put him to death.

WE will not undertake to deprive the Independants of the glory to have been the last and principall Actors in that execrable paracide, committed upon the sacred Majesty of their King, an action which being the shame of the Nation, and reproach of Religion, was neverthelesse set forth to the eyes of the world, with the ostentation of Justice and piety; and for this horrible execution, there was a solemne Thanksgiving enjoyned to be rendered to God by a publick Ordinance. It's true this Ordinance was ill obeyd, and many Ministers cryed out against it, which did so provoke their new Masters, that they appointed a Committee, to eject the Ministers out of their Benefices, and to place in Lay persons.

Now because the Presbyterians thunder aloud against this action, we will see whither they have not contributed to it, and if their behaviour to their good King gave him occasion to hope for better dealing at their hands.

And for this purpose we may do well to consider the Propositions which they presented the King at Beverly, and since at Uxbridge,
and

and at New-castle, then when the Presbyterians held the better end of the staffe; they required of him in substance, that he should not dispose, neither of the Militia, nor of the civil Government, nor of his Townes and Revenews, nor of his children, nor of his Court, nor of Honours, nor of the offices of the Crown, and that he should hold no power in the treaties of peace, of Warre, and of commerce with his neighbours; That his Councell should no more depend upon him, that he should have no Negative voice in Parliament, and should be bound to grant whatsoever the Parliament would demand of him, that he should shew no Acts of grace, nor execute Justice, and not have the power to do either good or evil; that he should consent that his party should be for ever ruined, and deliver up all those who had served him to their rage and Butchery: That he should utterly overthrow both the civil and Ecclesiasticall Government, Cut all the Nerves of Government, and dispossesse himself, and his posterity without resource; in brief that he should betray all the trusts God had committed to him, and render himself the most miserable and guilty creature in the whole universe; All the choise left this poor Prince was, whether he would be destroyed by his enemies, or by his own proper Act, for if he condescended not to these demands, being then in their hands that made them, the least he could expect was to be deposed; and if he granted them, he deposed himself: Every man that hath either prudence, or conscience, will choose rather to be executed by another hand, then be his own proper executioner: Read the Articles which are too long to be inserted here, and if there were any thing that was his, or which God had given him to keep, that these Gentlemen demanded not of him, except his life, and if he could assure himself of his life, after he had given his enemies the sword of Justice, and had by consequence acknowledged them his superiours, before whom he was Justiciable; The sequel of affaires have shewed the truth of this consequence, for it was upon the Presbyterian principles, that the Independants built their conclusions.

Rom. 13. Let them weigh well this reasoning: Saint Paul teacheth us, that the supream Magistrate, beareth the sword by God, he is his Minister; upon this ground the supream Magistrate exerciseth authority in the earth, by way of force: Observe that the Apostle saith not, he beareth swords, he assigns him but one, and this sword, both executes Justice, and the Militia by one and the same power. Now the Presbyterians have a long time taught, that the sword of the Militia appertained of right, and originally to the people, of whom the Parliament is the Representative, and if this Doctrine be not true, their Armes were unjust; But if it be true, the sword of justice also belongs to them; for if upon these grounds it was lawfull for them to wrest out of the hand of the King, the sword of the Militia, to make use of it against him, it was no lesse lawfull for them to employ the sword sword of justice against him ; all their Philosophy cannot divide these two powers, which have the same foundation both in Scripture and reason, and which have been equally violated in beheading him, and making war against him.

Therefore the Presbyterians who now cry so loud, that the person of the King was inviolable, and not subject to the sword of justice, condemns by this all their past actions ; for if it were an execrable paracide , to cut off his head upon a scaffold, it could not be the action of a good subject to take off his head by a Cannon bullet in the field, as they many times assaied. And in employing the Miliria against the King , they gave the Independants the sword of Justice, who unhappily massacred him, after they took from him, his sword, his Crown, his revenues, his servants his children, the liberty of his person, and which is much more of his conscience ; They left the Independants but a step to go further which was to take away his life ; And all wherein these last surpass them was, that they gave the last blow to the King, the Presbyterians laid his head on the block, and the Independants cut it off.

The name Independant was hardly known, then when his Majesty complained in one of his Declarations , that divers persons to the number of seventeen , had been accused to have said, they would kill the King, and how the Accusers could obtain no justice against them ; if the members of Parliament, who now abhor this murder, had then had any care of the safety of his sacred person, they would never have staied the course of Justice against these crimes. They had not entertained in pay Mercurius Britannicus, and such Rascals, by horrible libels to defame his Majesty, and inflame the Rage of a foolish and seditious people against him. If the quarrel had been only against his evil Councillours (which is the old and superannuated prættext of all Rebels) they would never have cashiered the Army of the Earl of Essex, for to imploy a ——— and a medly of pestilent Anabaptists, whom they knew to be mortall and sworn enemies of the King and Monarchy.

Certainly we have so much charity as to believe, they had not an intention to put him to death, when they began the warre against him, no not even when they imprisoned him; as Judas according to all appearance, had no intention to cause his Master to be crucified, when he sould him to the Councell of the Jewes, and never thought that the Priests would proceed so farre; for when he heard they had condemned him to dy, this unexpected blow so surprized him, and moved him in such a manner, that he presently brought back again the reward of iniquity, and rendred witnesse to the Truth, and to his conscience before the Councell, I have sinned in betraying innocent blood: Tis more then the Presbyterians have declared, beholding their King condemned and beheaded by their practices, although it was beyond their intention, neither have they been so smitten with remorse of Conscience, to bring back again that which they have got

by sacrilege and Rebellion, and yet notwithstanding, Jesus saith of Judas, much more penitent then some of them, That it had been better for him he had never been born.

In speaking thus, we have no design to lead them to despair, but to repentance, to which the mercy of God is ever open, since we speak of the party and not of particulars; many whereof detest their Counsels and past actions, and we do not doubt but that of such, the King shall yet receive most signall services; Its that whereof his wise and glorious Father assured him in his last instructions; Be assured, (saith he) as I am, that the most part of those who have injured me, have done it, not through malice, but through misinformation and a sinister apprehension of the affaires. None will be more loyal and faithfull both to me and you, then those subjects, who being sensible of their errors and of the wrongs we have received, shall feel in their souls most vehement stirrings to repentance, and ardent desires to do us some reparation for their past offences.

Without question there are many that yet serve the Covenanters, especially those in civil-employments, and even some in the Parliament, who groan under the yoke of impiety and sigh after Religion, Peace, their King and their duty: But alas tis but to think of Liberty when they are in Chaines, although so afflicted as we are, we have great compassion on them, and esteem their condition worse then ours. Its a great misery to be obliged to evil, because they have done evil, and to do the work of the Devil and to know it, and cannot retire.

Behold the fruits of affranchising themselves in the beginning to do evil, to the end that good might come of it : Flattering themselves with a good intention (which pretext cannot be wanting to any injustice) and with a vain hope to return to their duty when they should see it expedient, and to amend when they would what they had marred ; They offended God with gladnesse of heart, but now they find themselves, fettred in a cruel necessity, continually to offend him, or to cast themselves into our condition; they were better to come and keep us company, and generously to be ruined for the Love of God, then to be perpetuall Actors in the ruine of their King, their Country, their Church, and their Conscience ; and by their hardnesse and impenitent heart, treasure up wrath against the day of wrath, and the declaration of the righteous judgement of God, who will render to every one according to his works.

CHAP. XXV.

the good subjects of the King.*

FROM the oppression of the King, let us cast our eyes upon that of his subjects; to begin this discourse, is to enter into a Gulfe without bottom, of misery and impiety; for the Covenant is the den of Cyclops paved with blood, hung with spoyles; tis the cave of Radamanth, where is heard the noise of whips, the clattering of chaines, the menaces of furies, and the pittifull shrieks of those whom the Vultures teare a peeces, and who are dead alive; there you shall behold thousands Massacred, stretched upon the ground, the Flower of the Church and State cut off, the grandure of the Kingdome reduced into a heap of ruines, upon which set some petit Gentlemen, enriched by the Generall wracke, and fattened by the blood and bowells of their miserable Country, there you shall behold the Grandees of the Kingdome a foot, begging the favour of their inferiours a horseback, and beholding their offices and Revenews distributed among common persons and their enemies.

Against them and all the Nobility is the great quarrel, the Covenanters hate them, because they are persons of Honour, and acknowledged knowledged the King for the fountain of Honour, and as such for the most part, they have followed and served him, thus almost all the rich and wealthy families of the Kingdom were wholly ruined, not by the insolent Souldiers pillaging in hot blood, but by the extortion of a new Committee, and robbery, which was done upon the carpet, and in coole blood.

Of these grand Revenews, they accommodated themselves in the first place, and then those who have served them, assigning for a recompence to their instruments, persons of no worth, and newly raised from the dust, the antient rights and Revenews of Lords and Gentlemen, they wanting nothing to be such but blood and generosity. The Covenanters party often celebrate the feasts of Saturn, where the servants sit at the upper end of the Table, and are served by the Masters, and this fanatick insolence proceeded so farre, that these spoylers esteemed themselves as lawfully invested, in the inheritances of their superiours, and Country men, as the Israelites were of the lands of the Amorites; There is but this difference, the Israelites took possession by the command of God, these against his command.

Now by the speciall favour of the Gentlemen at Westminster, it was ordered that the fifth part of the Revenews should be for provision for the wives and children of Delinquents, (such they call them; who so little respected the Majesty of the House of Commons, that they were faithfull to their Sovereign) raign) thus their wives sometimes were admitted to be Farmers of their husbands estates, and reserving themselves the fifth part, paid the rest to the State. But at last, even the Delinquents were admitted to compound for their estates; those who were best dealt with, paid two years value of their rents, others this double; if such be their compassions, what is their severity? Is not this for them to comment upon the saying of Solomon, which saith, the mercies of the wicked are cruel.

But moreover these favours were not granted to all, there being many who were never admitted to farme their estates, no neither to redeeme them by composition, and whose wives and children have scarce bread, never the lesse, the confiscation of their estates, their perpetuall banishment, the sentence of death pronounced against them, are honorable markes of their great and loyall services to their Sovereign.

Of all those who suffered in this quarrel, the Ministers of the Gospel were the most barbarously dealt with, and for the least cause, very few amongst them, who engaged themselves in the Warre. The Bishops whom the lawes gave the precedency in the house of Lords, have wholly lost their places, through the violence of the House of Commons, assisted with the seditious multitude, their Houses and Ecclesiasticall Revenues have been sold, and are torne from the Church for ever; their persons a long time imprisoned, and the most eminent of them had his head cut off upon a scaffold.

This cruelty executed upon the heads descended upon the members, all the Revenews of the Dean and Chapters through the Kingdom are become the prey of sacrilege, and of lazy bellies, which cram and fill themselves with the patrimony of the Church; the lawfull possessors, without any distinction good or bad, were dispossessed; Whereby the Gentlemen of the Covenant clearly shew, that it was not the amendment of the Clergy, but their own enriching with the spoiles of the Church, was the mark and scope of this Reformation.

In the ninety seven Parishes within the walls of London, there were found upon account, that there were fourescore and five Ministers driven by violence from their Churches and Houses, and to number the Suburbs and Parishes adjoyning to London, the number of the Ministers, were a hundred and fifteen, without comprising those of Saint Pauls and Westminster, where the Deanes and Prebends ran the same fortune; of this number, twenty were imprisoned, and of those who are dead by distresse, and anguish in divers prisons, in the holds of ships and banishment, they reckoned five years since twenty two, but this number is almost doubled since, and the others dispersed and fled into strange Countries, or otherwise oppressed and ruined, are left to meditate upon this of the Psalmist, The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, he shall maintain me, for any other of the Church it's it's denyed them. In the other parts of the Kingdome, many faithfull Minifters to the King had the like ufage, efpecially thofe who poffeffed the faireft and belt Benefices, for this was an unpardonable crime, and fome of them were Maffacred by the furious Anabaptifts as a facrifice well pleafing to God.

Now whereas fome other delinquents have liberty to dwell in their houfes, to farme their rents, and to compound for the principall, to the Clergy nothing like this is accorded, but they are turned out in their fhirts, condemned to a totall ruine without Reffource. Their is indeed an ordinance of Parliament, that the wives and children of ejected Minifters, fhould have the fifth part of the Revenews of their Benefices, but it is very ill obferved, for the new incumbents into thefe Benefices, carry themfelves with fuch pride, and inhumanity to thefe poor women, refufing to obey the ordinance, conftrayning them to plead before Judges, their adverfaries; who inftead of fpeedily relieving them, delay them with length of time, and make them confume in fuits that which they borrowed to plead their caufe.

So that thefe poor defolate perfons, through the greatneffe of the expence, and tediousneffe of delays are constrained to defift their profecution; And many being ejected out of fmall Benefices, dare not prefent their petitions for the fifths, becaufe the expences will amount higher then the principall; Certainly

Certainly if there were any charity or sincerity in the Authors of this Ordinance, they would cause it to be stricktly observed, they would not permit that the poor wives and children whom they have ruined, should be shuffled off with litigious and crafty trickes, and oppressed with charges, when they come to demand that small Almes which is granted them out of their husbands estates, they should not deny them that in retaile which they have accorded them in grosse.

Moreover you must know that this pretended gratuity is but for the wives and children, but as for the Ministers, who have neither the one nor the other, they are accounted unworthy to live, and not any part of their estates is given to them; and thus have they rendered the Ministers of the Gospel conformable to their Master, who had not where to lay his head, and Jesus Christ is yet persecuted in his servants.

But the persecution staid not at those whom they ejected. Behold a new invention, to root out at one stroak, all those who remained loyall, or Orthodox in the Church and State. It was ordered that all who had any office either in Church or State, should subscribe to be faithfull to the present constitution of Government, by the House of Commons without King or Lords, but the principal Aime was to pick a quarrel with the Ministers of the Gospel upon their refusing, and to Abolish the Ministry, for which they had already prepared the people, having appointed a Committee, to displace disobedient Ministers,

Ministers, and to put those in their places, who condemned their vocation, these are the Termes of the instruction given the Committee, this horrible menace should give to all faithfull Pastors, cause rather of hope then feare, for he that said to his disciples, he that refuseth you, refuseth me, finds himself refused, and rejected in the persons of his servants, and yet more in their Ministry; without doubt he is provoked to Jealousie, and will take upon him the cause of the Ministry of his word.

Whosoever shall seriously consider all that Hideous spectacle of devastation of the Church, the abolition of Government, the ruine of the Pastors, the corruption of Religion, the profanation of the service of God, and shall compare this persecution with that the Greek Churches suffer at this day, shall find that all the Ravages of the Turkes since the taking of Constantinople, have not so disfigured the Church in two hundred years, as these Reformers did in six or seven years in their own Country, and amongst their brethren in the faith.

But passe we from the Ecclesiasticall to the civil, the new Courts erected to hear complaints, and to receive the compositions of Delinquents, were as so many Butchers shambles, and slaying houses, where they toare off the skin, and pulled out the bowells, and where they dismembred, and cut in peeces many antient and good houses; our miserable party had to do with worser Judges, then he spoken of in the eighteenth of Saint

Luke,

Luke, which feared not God, neither regarded man, and yet he suffered himself to be overcome by the importunity of the afflicted widow, and said, I will avenge her, or I will do her Justice; We propose him for an example to these cruel soules, and say after our Saviour, heare what the unjust Judge saith; And shall not God avenge his own elect which cry day and night unto him? though he beare long with them, I tell you that he will avenge them speedily.

There could be expected no juster sequel of iniquity from their beginnings, then when it was commanded for every person through the Kingdome to bring in their plate and Jewells, which the seditious Zealors contributed as freely as the Idolatrous Israelites to make a Golden Calfe, but those who did not bring their plate, they plundered their houses, and took it away by force; at the same time they commanded the people to take up Armes under the penalty of being hanged, and this sentence was executed in the Counties of Essex, Suffolk, and Cambridge; the principall actor of this Tyranny, was the Earl of Manchester, who caused some to be hanged, who not being well learned in the Catechisme of sedition refused openly to take up Armes against the King, others for the same reason were tied neck and heels, unreasonably misused, and cast into prisons until they had learned Rebellion, and the rest of the people affrighted hereby, went peaceably to commit treason against his Majesty.

Therefore the greatest cruelty of the Covenanters, was not in rendring their Country miserable, miserable, but in having rendred it wicked, and forced so many simple people to be instruments of their Ambition, and partakers of their crimes. How will they Answer for the blood and the consciences of their Souldiers killed in the Act of paracide, then when they discharged their Muskets against the Squadron where the person of the King was? How will they Answer, for them who were actually employed in the Massacre of the King, and who have since felt a Hell in their consciences, we must confesse that they have been more cruel towards their own party, then towards our, since they have onely made us to suffer evil, but they have forced their adherents both to suffer and do evil, which are the two principall things wherein all the work of the devil consits.

After this execrable murthor of their excellent Sovereign, how many murthors did they heap upon this? Duke Hamilton, the Earl of Holland, the truely Noble and loyall Lord Capell, many others killed in their Armies in divers places, many in every County condemned to death by partiall Judges, who received all accusations against those who had served their King, and many thousands good subjects murdered in Ireland by these Sanguinary Zelots.

It would be infinite to reckon up all their crimes against God, their Religion, their Church, their King, and their Country, and all that can be spoken, is nothing in comparison to that prodigious Masse of iniquity, which strikes heaven with its height, and makes even the earth to sink with the weight which drawes from the bottom of our wounded souls , these ardent sighes.

Oh our good God , art thou so wrathfully displeased against these Nations , as to give them over to a Reprobate sence , and abandoned to do the will of the devil, and establish his Kingdome ? Oh Religion , conscience , King , Church , State , Order , peace , Justice , Lawes , all are violated , defaced , disfigured and melted into a horrible Chaos of obicurity and confusion ; Alas how can it be that this people enlightned with the knowledge of God , abounding with the riches of Heaven and earth , should fall into such a Diabolicall frensy as to trample under their feet their Religion , cut off the head of their King , pluck out the throat of their mother , the Church , and deal with their fellow Countrymen , and brethren in Jesus Christ , more cruelly then the Mahumetans deal with the Christians , who drives them not from their houses and patrimonies in Turky , nor reduce them to the fift part of their Revenews , How

Isa. 1. 21. is the faithfull City become an harlot ! it was full of Judgement , righteousness lodged in it ; but now murtherers. Certainly although the evil they do unto us , should not force us to go out of our Country and leave it , yet the evil that we behold in it is capable to make us forsake it , and to imbrace the prophet Jeremies choise , Oh that I had in the wildernesse a lodging place of wayfaring men , that I might leave my people , and go from them , for they be adulterers , an assembly of treacherous men , and they bend their tongues like their bow for lies , but are not valiant for the truth , for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me saith the Lord.

Ha people frantick? whose eyes the God of this world have darkned, and exasperated your passions with a seditious Rage, cruelly and bloodily to persecute your Church and Sovereign? Miserable people who do the work of their enemies, and execute upon themselves the malediction pronounced to Hiernsalem in Rebellion, Sion shall teare her self with her own hands, ridding and casting their Crown and Glory upon the ground, cutting their own sinews, and breaking their bones, and by their weaknesse and disunion, invite the enemy to come and make an end of them. Blind Zealots, who stirred you up so disorderly to pull down Anti-Christ? you will find in doing thus, you have contributed to raise him up, and having drawn an horrible scandall upon our most Holy Religion, by your impious actions, and infamous Doctrines, have healed the mortal wound of the beast, and hardned the consciences of men against the sword of the Gospe<sup>l</sup>, w<sup>ch</sup> rarely penetrates with efficacy, when its welded with wicked hands.

That which comforts us in beholding you take such courses as to make faith cease from being in the earth, is that hereby you advance the desired coming of Jesus Christ, who hath marked that time for his return, when he will deliver his Church, from the bondage of seduction, vanity, blindnesse, and misery, for to invest her with liberty, holiness, and Glory, which he hath purchased for her by his blood.

In waiting for this happy deliverance, if we must still behold Rebellion proudly domineer, over the supream powers ordained by God, and sacriledge make havock in the Church, and crimes turned into Lawes and Doctrines of Religion, we shall preserve our selves by the grace of God, from murmuring at his Justice, and the conduct of his providence, remembring that God punisheth us justly by instruments which are unjust, and that he will assuredly manifest his just Judgments upon them, when he shall see it most expedient for his Glory, which he is used to advance by wayes contrary, in appearance, and makes, as in the creation, light to shine out of darknesse, we will endeavour to learn in our calamity, this Divine
